PREFACE.

For an intimate revelation of social conditions in New Jersey during the first sixty-five years of English supremacy it would be difficult to imagine a volume richer in material than this. From about 1680 it was the general practice to deposit wills with the Provincial Secretaries, by whom they were filed or recorded—usually both,—together with inventories of estates, accounts of executors and administrators, and other papers pertaining to such matters, and many odd documents having no apparent relation thereto—as ante-nuptial contracts, marriage licenses, and the like. These records were brought together in 1790 or shortly thereafter, in the office of the Secretary of State at Trenton, where they are now carefully arranged and preserved.

With the progress of time the wills and inventories show the increase in wealth of the colonists, at first particularly in lands and cattle; later, in those possessions which indicate the acquisition of luxuries. A "muscatoes curtain" and a "musketernett" were obviously necessaries. But from the first there are mentions of relics of old-country dignities—in the articles of gold and silver, seals, jewelry (including a diamond ring), watches, swords, an "agate hilted rapier," a "skeene," doubtless derived from some Highland ancestor, "armor," "artillery," and other valued belongings. In some scores of cases a Bible is bequeathed, not infrequently in Dutch or in French. Other volumes are very often mentioned, mostly religious or theological works, with occasional lists of books on law and medicine, the collections being sometimes dignified as libraries, or as a "lyberary" or "libruary." An amber necklace, a sure protection against witchcraft, especially for children, was naturally prized; and so were the few looking glasses in the colony. The silver plate usually included punch bowls, but in one instance this popular vessel was of lignum vitæ. Among the importations by the wealthy, or the curios picked up by seafaring men, were the "Chappay Cabbonite," (a Japanese cabinet?), the "Turkey worsted chair covers," the coral and bells to amuse some infant, the "berrey buttons," china dishes and Spanish tables. The "peas-porridge tawney-cloth," the "printed leather breeches," the silk gloves, the broadcloth, the "men's stomachers," the "corblina hats," the "a Larrum" clock, and the "pott hangers with the flower de luce in them," were also doubtless of foreign workmanship. The people readily adopted Indian bows and arrows and knives, and also, alas, made slaves of the harmless aborigines.

There are pleasant glimpses of generosity on the part of the testators, as where they remember a faithful apprentice or servant, or give freedom to a slave. In about thirty wills provision is made for the building or repair of churches or Friends' meeting-houses, or for the poor, or for burying-grounds, and half-a-dozen bequests are made for schools. The need of education was painfully appreciated by some of these will-makers, who, even when "fol of pain of Bodey," were anxious to promote the "scowling" of their children, whom they wished to have taught "to read and wright true Inglish," or "to larn to Read rite & Sifer," to which end they gave their "Holy and soly" "ekcketere" "pour and athorate and strink" to collect all debts, including those "Dangerously dew," or "dangros depts," or both "sperate and desperate," warning them at the same time not to pay "extorsinat" claims of the "Curirgen" in the testator's last "Sixnis," or of other creditors, in order to save enough to pay the "Lagoses," especially those in remembrance of "meaney kineneses" on the part of a "dafter," "Cester," "cussin," "cinsman," or other "aire."

Many a family romance and many a tragedy is hinted at in these musty old documents—as where Captain William Sandford in his last will declares that the mother of his children was made his wife on board a vessel in the Surinam river many a long year before. Stories there are of family estrangements, of runaway marriages, of wayward children, of disinherited sons and daughters, of parents grieving over sons who have disappeared for years, but who are still provided for in their father's will in case they return. Not a few of these wills were made in anticipation of a voyage to England or to the West Indies, and that the perils of such sea-goings were not overestimated is shown by the fact that in many cases the wills were offered for probate very soon after, the testators having been lost at sea. A very large proportion of all the testaments are death-bed wills—made during the last illness of the testators, indicating the prevalence of the superstitious dread of performing this simple duty when in good health.

A suggestive picture of the primitiveness of those early days is the story of John Clarke, the peddler, murdered in 1691 at Salem, whose pack had to be administered on, after his boat had been taken up and his murderer arrested. Other inquests hint at suspicious deaths. And what a gruesome bequest is that of George Gordon, of Perth Amboy, in 1686, who gives his body to his physician for dissection.

The inventories and appraisements give valuable information as to the character and worth of farm products in New Jersey before 1730, and as to the occupations of the testators and others.

These are but a few of the topics suggested merely in glancing over the Index of Subjects at the end of the volume. A careful perusal of the contents of the documents here so carefully abstracted by Mr. B. Fernow will abundantly repay the reader.

In preparing this work the abstracts of wills were made from the originals, and where they are recorded a reference to the book of record is given. As the earlier wills were recorded in many different volumes, it was thought best to arrange the wills in the alphabetical order of testators' or intestates' names, which also saved forty or fifty pages of index, and at the same time covered the whole Colony for the period preceding 1731.

The manuscript for a second volume of these Abstracts of Wills, 1731–1750, was destroyed in the great fire at Paterson, February 8–9, 1902. The "copy" for a third volume, 1751–1760, was fortunately saved a like fate. It is hoped that the continued liberality of the Legislature will provide for continuing this series of Abstracts of Wills down to 1804, when the present system came into vogue, of having all wills recorded in the County of the testator's residence.

Early Will-Making in New Jersey.

PRIMITIVE IDEAS OF PROPERTY.

The evolution of mankind from primitive savagery to barbarism, from barbarism to semi-civilization, and so to fuller civilization, has been marked at every step through the toilsome ages by a departure from the idea of tribal, or communal, or family ownership, to the conception of individual property, whereby the industrious, the thrifty, the capable, has been assured of the right to possess and enjoy that which he has acquired. As that profound student and keen observer, Morgan, puts it, basing his conclusions chiefly upon his researches among the American Indians, who present to us a picture of primitive society in the states of savagery and of barbarism: In the development of society there were two great stages—"firstly, changing descent from the female line, which was the archaic rule, as among the Iroquois, to the male line, which was the final rule, as among the Grecian and Roman gentes; and, secondly, changing the inheritance of the property of a deceased member of the gens, from his gentiles [blood-kin], who took it in the archaic period, first to his agnatic kindred, and finally to his children."[1] Sir Henry Maine, also, concludes that the earliest ownership of land was in the community, rather than in the individual, although the periodical redistribution of the land among families has been a very general custom among Aryan peoples from the earliest times. The village system, which prevails to this day among the Hindus, and which seems to have existed among Teutonic peoples to well within the historic period, was evidently derived from the primitive idea of tribal or community ownership, but at least in its later stages undoubtedly recognized individual proprietorship to a larger extent than has been generally appreciated or admitted by students, even one so thorough as Maine.[1]

THE DESCENT OF PROPERTY.

As a natural outgrowth of the idea of individual ownership, or property, there followed the concession of the right, or at least the propriety, of keeping one's own property in one's own family, even after death; and by an easy step forward, the propriety of having the ancestor's possessions descend to his children. This, of course, was a long step from the archaic period, represented in primitive American society, when descent was in the female line. When property came to descend in the male line it is reasonable to suppose that the community, or at least the family, saw to it that the property was distributed among the sons, in such a manner as to make the best use of it for the community at large. This appears by many of the ancient Hindu laws regulating descent, as will be shown presently. The earliest written laws known to us make no provision for the testamentary disposition of property, but carefully regulate its distribution at the owner's decease.

SEMITIC LAWS OF DESCENT.

Among Semitic peoples we have that remarkable Code of Hammurabi, King of Babylon, cir. 2200 B. C., the oldest body of law that has come down to us. Of the two hundred and eighty-two sections of that Code there are twenty (165 to 184) prescribing the manner in which a man's property may be distributed by him in his lifetime, and how it shall descend at his death. Nowhere is he authorized to dispose of it by will, nor to disinherit a son, even in his lifetime, except with the approval of a court, after due investigation.

By the Hebrews, while at first the system of tribal ownership was recognized the inheritance of the first-born son was soon insisted on, and failing male issue the descent was in the female line.[2]

The Koran carefully sets forth the manner in which a man's estate shall be distributed, making wise provision for his children, and failing issue, then for his next of kin, in which we see indications of the primitive customs of the Arabians.[1]

ARYAN LAWS OF INHERITANCE.

Among Aryan peoples, the oldest literature we have is that of the Hindus, as embodied in the Vedas, a great collection of religious hymns. Upon these have been grafted an infinite variety of religious, philosophical, sociological and legal commentaries, which have developed into systems and codes, in turn the subject of yet other commentaries. Perhaps the earliest of these outgrowths of the Vedas are the Laws of Manu, probably dating back at least 1000 B. C. According to his Laws (IX, 104–118), on the father's death the oldest son was required to support the family, and the brothers to endow their sisters. Gautama's "Institutes of the Sacred Law," dating far back toward the times of the Vedas, also provide for descent to the sons, with some modifications according to circumstances.[2] The Vâsish*th*a Dharma*s*âstra (of uncertain date, but probably very ancient) provides (XVII) for the partition of the paternal estate among the sons, in certain proportions according to the mother's caste, while the daughters "divide the nuptial present of their mother."[3] Apastamba's "Aphorisms of the Sacred Law," compiled cir. 500 B. C., declare that a man "should during his lifetime, divide his wealth equally among his (capable) sons," failing which the inheritance might go to a daughter. He explains away the ancient Vedas in favor of primogeniture, and the statement that "Manu divided his wealth among his sons."[4] The "Law of Inheritance" as explained by B*ri*haspati (cir. 1 B. C.) is much the same as that given by Aspatamba, as might be expected, he following closely the ancient code of Manu.[1] The Nâradasmṛiti (cir. A. D. 350–450) makes many modifications in the earlier codes, and virtually abrogates the right of primogeniture by declaring that even the youngest son may undertake the management of the family property, if specially qualified for the task, and that the mother shall share equally with the sons, and an unmarried daughter take the same share as a younger son. The "Thirteenth Title of Law" in this work, fifty-two sections, is devoted entirely to the "Law of Inheritance."[2] In the Institutes of Vishnu (cir. A. D. 400) the laws of inheritance are strictly defined, the general principle being that "among the sons each preceding one is preferable to the one next in order, and takes the inheritance, and maintains the rest," including those incapable of self-support.[3] The Baudhâyana (cir. A. D. 1100) contains elaborate regulations for the distribution of the inheritance (I, 5, 11, 11–14; II., 2, 3, 1–53), a preference being allowed to the eldest son, the other sons sharing equally, the sons of mothers of different castes, however, taking according to the order of the castes.[4]

It is doubtless true, that many of these elaborate laws were rather an expression of ideals than legislation actually in effect, but many of the customs or systems they represent, after being handed down for thousands of years, from the misty times of the Vedas, exist to-day in the "village communities" of India, which are so widespread and interesting a feature of that strange country, and which have preserved through all the ages much of the thought and practice of primitive times.[5]

This imperfect summary of the earliest laws of inheritance suffices to show the importance attached to the subject by the Semitic and Aryan precursors of the European races, and the usages forming the foundation for Grecian, Roman and Teutonic legislation on the subject.

ROMAN TESTAMENTARY LAW.

Without attempting to trace the transition from primitive customs of inheritance or descent to the more artificial systems of testamentary disposition of property we may pass at once to the Roman law on the subject, the history and character of which are indicated in the summary given in the Institutes of Justinian, compiled in the sixth century A. D., wherein it is related:

"Two kinds of testaments were formerly in use; the one was practiced in times of peace, and named calatis comitiis; because it was made in a full assembly of the people; and the other was used, when the people were going forth to battle, and was stiled procinctum testamentum. But a third species was afterwards added, which was called per æs et libram, because it was effected by emancipation, which was an alienation, made by an imaginary sale in the presence of five witnesses, and the libripens or balance-holder, all citizens of Rome, above the age of fourteen; and also in the presence of him, who was called the emptor familæ or purchaser.[1] The two former kinds of testaments have been disused for many ages; and that, which was made per æs et libram, although it continued longer in practice, hath now ceased in part to be observed.

"The three kinds of testaments before mentioned all took their rise from the civil law; but afterwards another species was introduced by the edict of the prætor; for, by the honorary or prætorian edict, the signature of seven witnesses was decreed sufficient to establish a will without any emancipation or imaginary sale; but this signature of witnesses was not required by the civil law.

[1] Before the time of the Decemvirs (cir. 450 B. C.) a Roman citizen declared his wishes regarding the disposal of his property after his death, to the assembly of the thirty curiæ or parishes—a relic of tribal or gentile government. By the Twelve Tables the private testaments of the father of a family were authorized. He "promulgated his verbal or written testament in the presence of five citizens, who represented the five classes of the Roman people; a sixth witness attested their concurrence; a seventh weighed the copper money, which was paid by an imaginary purchaser, and the estate was emancipated by a fictitious sale and immediate release." See Gibbon's admirable discourse on the Civil Law, Chap. xlv, of his "Decline and Fall of the Roman Empire;" Livy, Lib. iii, caps. 33-35.

"When the civil and prætorian began to be blended together partly by usage, and partly by emendation, made by the imperial constitutions, it became an established rule, that all testaments should be made at one and the same time according to the civil law; that they should be sealed by seven witnesses according to the prætorian law, and that they should also be subscribed by the witnesses, in obedience to the constitutions. Thus the law concerning testaments seems to be tripartite: for the civil law inforces the necessity of having witnesses to make a testament valid, who must all be present at one and the same time without interval; the sacred constitutions ordain, that every testament must be subscribed by the testator and the witnesses; and the prætorian edict requires sealing, and fixes the number of witnesses.

"What we have already said concerning written testaments, is sufficient. But if any man is willing to dispose of his effects by a nuncupative testament; i. e., by a testament without writing, let him be assured, if, in the presence of seven witnesses, he declares his will by word of mouth, that such verbal declaration will be a complete and valid testament according to the civil law."[1]

THE ROMAN-DUTCH LAW IN NEW NETHERLAND.

The civil law codified in Justinian's time was somewhat modified in Western Europe, and in Holland a new code (a "Political Ordinance") was adopted in 1580, elaborating and defining the Roman-Dutch Law. According to this system wills could be made orally, or in writing.

Orally, or by word of mouth, by expressing one's wishes as to the disposal of the property, to an alderman and the secretary of the local court, or to a notary in the presence of two witnesses, whereupon the notary reduced the will to writing, and it was then signed by the testator and the witnesses, and the notary made a record of the transaction in his official minutes.

In writing, which having been signed and sealed was handed to a notary in the presence of two witnesses, the testator at the same time, in their presence, declaring it to be his testament. The notary endorsed it accordingly, and made a minute in his records, which was signed by the testator and the witnesses. The notary also kept the original will in his custody, to be produced only on the death of the testator.

No public record of wills was required, or authorized—a fact causing untold regret on the part of persons who have vainly sought for data of their Dutch ancestry in Holland. The wills and the records of their execution and attestation were kept by the notary who reduced them to writing, and by his family afterwards. The notary being a public, judicial officer, his action in the matter of wills was regarded as equivalent to the proof and probate required in the English courts.[1]

SOME DUTCH WILLS AND ADMINISTRATIONS.

The Roman-Dutch law carefully guarded the rights of infants, and of intestates, and in the government of New Netherland the Director-General and Council of the Colony exercised jurisdiction in such matters, the same being afterwards delegated to the Burgomasters and Schepens, who sat as an Orphans' Court. In 1656 Orphan Masters were appointed, to take cognizance of the rights of minors. From the records of this body the following extracts are taken, as illustrating in some measure the manner of making wills, the administration of estates, and the protection of the interests of orphans:

1656, January 20. "Govert Loockermans and Pieter van Couwenhoven, guardians over the infant children of Jacob van Couwenhoven and his deceased wife Hester Jansen, appearing produced a testament, made by said Hester Jansen, dec'd, and Jacob van Couwenhoven, before Notary D. v. Schelluyne and witnesses April 20, 1653, also evidence of the property left by their mother to the children, sworn to by Couwenhoven before said Notary October 2, 1655, and an inventory of the children's jewels and clothing. They request that pursuant to the custom of our Fatherland the money of the children may be deposited with the Orphan chamber or put out on mortgage, so that they might not be prejudiced in their rights. Considering the request reasonable, the Orphan-masters provisionally order, that the testament and the proof of property shall be recorded in the Secretary's office, and whereas Couwenhoven is at present not in good health, that he shall be spoken to about it."[1]

1656, May 5. "Whereas Cornelis Groesen and his wife Lysbet N. have come to their death during the latest disaster with the Indians, and it is reported that they have left some goods at the house of Jan Schryver, the tailor, therefore the Orphanmasters P. Leendertsen van die Grift and Pieter Wolf. van Couwenhoven, having deemed it advisable, so that the children, now captives of the Indians, when they return, may have the benefit of them and debtors as well as creditors may come to their rights, this inventory was taken by the Orphanmasters in the presence of the Deacons of this City on the 20th of April 1656, as more fully appears by the record of inventories, and as some goods were found which would be of no use to the children, and as money is required to ransom them and to pay outstanding debts, the Orphanmasters have decided to sell to the highest bidder at auction the movable goods, which was done on May 4th, 1656, and recorded May 5th. Agreeably to the notice affixed, everybody is notified, that if he has anything to claim from the estate left by Cornelis Groesen, dec'd, he must report it between to-day and next Monday, May 8th, to the Secretary of this City, Jacob Kip, with specications and proofs, under the penalty of being debarred from his claim in the future."[2]

1657, November 28. "Whereas, Roelof Jansen, mason, has died at the house of Arent Lauwerensen, on the 16th of this month of November, 1657; and whereas said Arent Lauwerensen by a petition to the Burgomasters and Schepens of this City has requested that they would please to direct and authorize one or two persons to sell at public auction to the highest bidder, according to inventory, the property left by said Roelof Jansen, that thus might be paid the expenses of his funeral, his house rent and other known and unknown debts, Therefore their said Worships order the Orphanmasters to enter upon said estate and to do therewith what ought to be done, and they herewith authorize and direct Sieur Mattheus de Vos, Notary Public, and Arent Lauwerensen to have the estate sold at auction by the Secretary of the Burgomasters and Schepens, as well as of the Orphanmasters, whereby the debts, as above stated, shall be paid, and the surplus handed to them to dispose of as they shall find best."[1]

1657, December 12. "Anna Claas, with Sieur Mattheus de Vos, Notary Public, and with Arent Lauwerensen, administrator of the estate of Roelof Jansen, mason, dec'd, appeared and proved by the affidavits of two credible persons that said Roelof Jansen, dec'd, had given her in his lifetime his everyday clothing, his gun, powderhorn and what be longed to it; she also produces an account for house rent, for caretaking and money advanced, amounting to 99 fl.18 st., wherein are included 7 beavers, the balance being in wampum. She requests that the affidavits and the account may be approved. The orphanmasters approve the affidavits and account, ordering their Secretary to pay the account, after deducting what the husband of said Anna Claas has bought from the estate."[2]

January 11, 1658. "Appeared Class Bordingh and Pieter Jacobsen, administrators and guardians of the estate of Anna Cornelis and of her son Jacob Jacobsen, who produced the inventory of as much as they could find of said estate, and stated that as part of the goods were missing they could do no more. Lauwerens Lauwerensen and Jacob Jacobsen appeared, and Lauwerens was informed that following the customs and laws of the Fatherland it had been considered necessary to appoint administrators for the estate of Anna Cornelis, dec'd, and that much of it was missing. He answers, that over 400 fl. were paid for funeral expenses, and if anything is missing he does not know where it is. The Orphanmasters order Lau werens Lauwerensen to give a satisfactory account to the administrators and to make an agreement with them; also that the missing property shall be offset by the funeral expenses; the administrators were to dispose of the goods to the best advantage of the estate and benefit of Anna Cornelis' son."[1]

1658, April 2. "Whereas, Bruyn Barenzen, late cooper at Breuckelen, has died at the house of Mighiel Jansen on the 12th of February of this year 1658, therefore the Orphanmasters of this City of New Amsterdam request and commission Jan Eversen Bout with Mighiel Jansen to administer upon the estate left by said Bruyn Barenzen, to sell his goods at public auction, and to inform the Orphanmasters of the amounts received."[2]

1659, April 9. "Catalyntje, the wife of Joresy, coming in says that a man called Abraham Jansen van Salee, alias the Turk, who had lived at her house, was dead, having made a testament whereby he has devised his property to the negro-woman and the child he has had by her, Joresy having been named executor. She says the Deacons of the City have attached and seized the property, and she had been to the Director-General, who had referred her to the Orphanmasters. As the domicile is not within this jurisdiction the case was not taken up by this Board, but again referred to the Director-General and Council."[3]

1659, August 2. "Cristyntje Cappvens came before the Board and stated that she and her husband had made a testament, showing it to the Board. It was found on reading it that the Orphanmasters are excluded, but as there is no mention of guardians for the child nor a settlement upon the same of the paternal inheritance, she requests that as guardians may be appointed the Hon^ble^ Paulus Leenderzen van der Grift, selected by both, and Dirck Jansen Croon, thereto requested by her deceased husband, who had accepted the office, but said Dirck Jansen Croon not being here, she asks that the Hon^ble^ Pieter Wolfertsen van Couwenhoven may provisionally act in his place, which is allowed."[4]

1659, September 27. "Whereas Jacob Coppe has died and there has been found among his papers and property here a testament, made December 14, 1653, before Notary D. van

"Jan Jansen de Jongh, widower of Cornelia van Vloet, dec'd, intending to marry Mrs. Catharina Brull, shows a testament made by him and his late wife before Notary Dirck van Schelluyne and witnesses, October 31, 1655, containing the last will of both, as follows: they first revoke and annul all former testaments, last wills, etc., made by them either singly or jointly, especially the testament made before said Notary and witnesses May 13, 1653, wherein they name and institute as heir, as they have no child, the survivor of them both, to have all property, real and personal, stocks, credits, money, gold, silver, coined or not coined, jewels, clothing, linen or woollen, household goods and others, including legacies and bequests, either already received by testators from their parents or collateral relatives, or to be received from intestates, or under a testament, during the life of the first one of them dying, nothing in the world excepted or reserved, as well here in this country, as in Holland, Brabant, the Duchy of Bois, the Barony of Breda, or elsewhere; to have all forever, use it as inherited property, and do therewith as is done with one's own free property, without anybody's interference, they, testators, promising each other never to act against or change this, their last will."[2]

The last will and testament of Deltien Lubbertse, dated January 2, 1664, was presented for probate before the Mayor and Aldermen of the city of New York, Nov. 30, 1664.[3]

The absence of written records renders it quite impossible to determine with precision the law of inheritance among the Germanic or Teutonic peoples two thousand years ago. According to Tacitus (cap. xx) "Heredes tamen successoresque sui cuique liberi: et nullum testamentum. Si liberi non sunt, proximus gradus in possessione fratres, patrui, avunculi." Here was the law of descent, simply, on much the same lines as among the Aryan and Semitic peoples two thousand years earlier.

It is a striking illustration of the slight impression made by Roman institutions on the people of England, that the Roman law left not a vestige of its influence on the institutions of that country after the conquerors had withdrawn. The latest researches fail to reveal any trace of testaments among the Anglo-Saxons before the ninth century, and even those seem to have been rather in the nature of post-obit gifts, than of wills in the modern acceptation of the term.

In the laws proclaimed by Alfred, cir. 890, for example, it was declared (cap. 41): "The man who has boc-land, and which his kindred left him, then ordain we that he must not give it from his mæg-burg [kindred], if there be writing or witness that it was forbidden by those men who at first acquired it, and by those who gave it to him that he should do so."

"The ordinance of Ethelred [A. D. 978–1016], and his witan ordained as frith-bot for the whole nation, at Woodstock, in the land of the Mercians," provided (cap. 71): "If anyone depart this life intestate, be it through his neglect, be it through sudden death; then let not the lord draw more from his property than his lawful heriot. And according to his direction, let the property be distributed very justly to the wife and children and relations, to everyone according to the degree that belongs to him."[1]

That there was testamentary folk-law, or borough-law, seems probable. Indeed, in the gradual growth of royal authority, when the devise of land was condemned, borough customs were spared. By the thirteenth century the system of primogeniture had become firmly established, so that a man could no longer dispose of his lands by will—except burgage tenements—and could only bequeath his chattels. After nearly three centuries the statutes of 32 and 34 Hen. VIII. gave the power of devising to all having estates in fee simple, except in joint tenancy, over the whole of their soccage land, and over two-thirds of their lands holden by knight's service. This power was extended by statutes of 12 Charles II., cap. 10, and 29 Charles II., cap. 3. The last-mentioned act prescribed the method of executing wills, requiring them to be in writing, signed by the testator, or by some person for him, in his presence, by his direction, and attested and subscribed in his presence by three witnesses.

The administration of estates was taken charge of by the church, professedly in the interest of the soul of the deceased testator or intestate, and the executor became the personal representative of the deceased. The will was proved in "the court of the judge ordinary, who was in the normal case the bishop of the diocese." At a later period it was decided that if the testator had goods worth more than five pounds in each of two dioceses, the executor should seek a "prerogative" probate in the archbishop's court. The goods of intestates were at the disposal of the judge ordinary, who in 1285 was by statute required to pay the intestate's debts out of such chattels.[1]

This system was gradually extended, until sustantially all matters connected with the proof of wills, the granting of letters of administration, and of guardianship, and the administering of estates,[2] was entrusted to or absorbed by the ecclesiastical courts. When England separated from the See of Rome this jurisdiction, by the statute of 23 Hen. VIII., was declared to Litt., 111, declares that "the testamentary power over land was certainly in use among our Anglo-Saxon and Danish ancestors." The statement is chiefly based on Wright's Tenures, and cannot be substantiated by any documents known to us at this day. As for certain testamentary customs, see Blount's Jocular Tenures, London, 1698; also Lex Custumaria: or, a Treatise of Copy-hold Estates, etc , by S. C., London, 1696.

be in the bishop, or ordinary, of the diocese,—so called, says my Lord Coke, who was a better authority on law than on etymology, English or Latin, "quia habet ordinariam jurisdictionem in jure proprio, et non per deputationem, the name we have anciently taken from the canonists, and do apply it only to a bishop, or any other that hath ordinary jurisdiction in causes ecclesiastical"[2] —and in cases of goods of the value of £5—bona notabilia—in another diocese, in the Metropolitan, the archbishop of Canterbury, or in the archbishop of York. The bishop exercised this jurisdiction by an official, called his chancellor, and sometimes called the ordinary, who was his surrogate; the archbishop, who claimed it by way of special prerogative, by an official called the judge of the prerogative court, a name derived from the fact that the jurisdiction in such cases was by the archbishop's prerogative.[3] An appeal lay from the ordinary to the prerogative court, whose sentence was without appeal, until a statute of 24 Hen. VIII. gave an appeal to the King in chancery, which was heard before delegates appointed under the great seal, and who were called the court of delegates.

NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.

In times when the art of writing was confined almost exclusively to the clergy, and when landowners very often met with sudden deaths, in battle or in broils, written wills were usually or at least frequently out of the question. So the law recognized nuncupative wills—made orally in the presence of witnesses, and afterwards reduced to writing by someone who heard the declaration of the testator.[1] The statue of 29 Chas. II., cap. 3, requiring all wills to be in writing, signed by the testator, practically forbade nuncupative testaments.

ity in secular affairs, and as there was no ecclesiastical court—neither bishop nor archbishop—and they were at liberty to make their own laws,[1] they provided for the probate of wills before the Governor and Assistants, by an act passed in 1633. The practice during the first twelve years of the settlement does not appear from the statute books, but doubtless the act in question was substantially a reduction to writing of the custom that had previously prevailed in the Colony. This law was as follows:

"It is enacted by the Court that the will and Testaments of such as die bee ordered proued before the Gou^r^ and Assistants the next Court after the pty is deceased prouided the court bee not within one month after the death of the Testator and a full Inventory duely vallued bee p^r^sented with the same before letters of adminnestration bee granted to any; of all the goods and Chattels of the said prsons; alsoe if incase any man die without will; then his goods bee by his wife or other nearest to him Inventoried and duely vallued and p^r^sented to the Gou^r^ and assistants att the time forementioned and if it be a single pson without kinred heer resedent; that then the Gou^r^ appoint some to take a Just Inventory of the same vpon oath to bee true and Just as in other the cases before mentioned."[2]

This act was continued in the revision of 1658, and subsequently.

The propriety of nuncupative wills was obvious in a new settlement, and in 1645 this law was made:

"It is enacted by the Court that if any man being weake and sicke and otherwise of disposing memory do declare his mind and will concerning the disposing of his lands or goods before two or more of the ffreeholders of the place where hee liues;

The Colonies of Massachusetts Bay, New Haven and Connecticut had similar laws, and the first English settlers of New Jersey, coming as they did from those Colonies, brought with them their ideas of legislation on such subjects, derived from their experience.

EARLIEST NEW YORK LEGISLATION.

The laws published at Hempstead, Long Island, March 1, 1665, by Colonel Richard Nicolls, the Duke of York's first Governor, set forth with much precision the procedure in cases of administration.

"Upon the Death of any person the Constable with two Overseers of the parish shall Repair to the house of the deceased party to enquire after the manner of Death and of his Will and Testament and in Case none doth Appear, or shall be produced, it may be taken for granted that the Person Dyed intestate And in the Presence of the Widow Children and other Relations, if any such therebe or if any such refuse to be present, It shall be lawful for the said Constable in the presence of the Overseers to make a due Search and enquiry after the estate of the deceased and within eight & forty hours after, he is to deliver in writing and upon Oath his full knowledge, to the next Justice of the Peace and the said Justice of y^e^ peace is impowered to send out warrants to take Security against any embezelment or disposal of y^e^ said Estate under any pretence whatsoever, until the next Court of Sessions where all Cases of Administration within that Liberty shall be Adjudged.

"The Estates of all Persons dying intestate who have neither the Relations of Children Brothers or Sisters or their Children Uncles or Aunts or their Children for want of such heires shall, Elapse to the King provided always that Such Elapsing shall not hinder the Lawfull Claymes of any Such Relations afore mentioned, if it be made appeare upon Oath to the Court, within one year and Six weeks.

"Memorandum That what is here spoken of Executors or Administrators the like is ment; and intended also of Executrixes & Administratrixes who in such Cases are to have the same privileges."[2]

At the General Court of Assizes held in New York, September 28–October 4, 1665, it was ordered:

"That all Orignall Wills after haveing beene prooved att the Court of Assizes or Sessions and returned into the Office of Records att New-Yorke shall remain there, and the Executors Administrators shall recieve a Coppie thereof, with a Certificate of its being allowed and attested under the Seale of the Office.

"Administration may be granted by the Court to any Person, the Second Sessions, but to widow or Child, Brother or Sister immediately.

"A (Quietus) is to be procured within a yeare and six weeks after Administration is granted or a will prooved.

"That Wills and Administrations of Estates under the vallew of one hundred Pounds, are not obliged to bee Recorded at New Yorke."[3]

After the English had conquered New Netherland, the Mayor's Court of New York continued to act as an Orphans' Court, in the same manner as the Burgomasters and Schepens had formerly done, and wills were drawn up and executed—at least among the Dutch—frequently after the ancient custom. The following instances illustrate the maner in which the Duke of York's Laws were practically applied by the Mayor's Court, succeeding to the functions of the Dutch tribunal:

EARLIEST PROBATES OF WILLS IN NEW JERSEY.

When New Jersey was granted (March 12, 1664) by Charles II. to the Duke of York, and by him (June 23–24, 1664) to the Lords Proprietors—Lord John Berkley and Sir George Carteret—the latter appointed Philip Carteret (February 10, 1664–5) to be Governor of New Jersey. The origin and history of the sovereign power of the Colony, ultimately vesting in the Governor, has been traced in the Introduction to Volume XXII. of the New Jersey Archives, pages lxi–lxvi. No record has been found of the probate of any will in New Jersey for more than five years after the arrival of Gov. Carteret in the Colony, and there was no legislation or public order on the subject until he had been here ten years. Yet there can be little doubt that he exercised the functions of Ordinary or Surrogate-General, as part of the supreme power of government which had devolved upon him. It is not unlikely, however, that the Dutch inhabitants continued to follow their old way, to some extent, permitting the wills of deceased testators to remain in the custody of the notaries drafting them, and settling intestates' estates by mutual agreement, or with the assistance of the church consistory. The settlers at Elizabethtown and at Monmouth having received their patents from Col. Nicolls (the former December 1, 1664, and the latter April 8, 1665) prior to the coming of Governor Carteret (who arrived at New York July 29, 1665), were naturally reluctant to yield allegiance to the Lords Proprietors, especially as that involved the payment of quit rents to the new owners of New Jersey. Hence they would be disposed to follow the practice in the matter of wills laid down in the Duke of York's Laws, published on Long Island, whence a large proportion of those settlers had come. The Newark colonists, in the absence of other regulations on the subject, doubtless adhered to the usage to which they had been accustomed in Connecticut. The Swedish settlers on the Delaware undoubtedly were governed by the Civil Law, prevailing in their fatherland, and which in that country was much the same as in Holland. But in a new country, with a scanty population, widely scattered, and the merest shadow of a central government, each settlement or community must have been, practically, self-governing in most of its internal affairs.[1] In a compact settlement like Newark or Elizabethtown, with say two dozen families, all of them intimate, bound together by the interests of common ownership, and many of them by ties of kindred, what more natural than a reversion to primitive communal government? If a man died, his will—if he made any—would be read at his funeral, in the presence of the whole community, and the settlement would see that it was carried into effect, even though there should be no probate of the instrument. If he died without a will, the entire body of citizens would administer upon his estate and deal even and exact justice to the widow and children. The writer has seen wills made in the latter part of the eighteenth century which were never proved or recorded, but which were carried out in perfect compliance with their provisions. The earliest record that has been found of any order by Governor Carteret relative to administering upon an estate is the following, under date of December 20, 1670:

"By Phillip Carteret Esq^r^ Governor of the province of New Jersey. Whereas Daniel Greasy late of Woodbridge, planter, dyed Intestate and Leaving only a Widow behind him Without any Children or any other relations or kindred to survive him In his Estate, I have thought fitt at the Request of said Widow Catherine Greasy, To nominate and appoint And doe by these presents nominate and appoint her the said Catharine Greasy to be Administratrix to her aforesaid husband deceased Estate of Land, Goods and Chattels, movable or Immovable, she together with the overseers here following nominated and apointed, taking a true Inventory of her said husband's Estate that he left behinde him, and to Returne the same Vppon them into the secretaries office, out of which said estate shee Is to pay and satisfie all Just Debts that Where dew and owing by her said deceased husband—And likewise shee hath hereby full powers to sue, recover and receive all such debts, that are and where Justly due Vnto him, and for the better ℘forming of the ℘mises I doe hereby appoint John Smith Scotchman and Samuel Moore both of the towne of Woodbridge, to be the overseers and assistants Vnto her the said Widow, and I doe further Give and Grant Vnto the said Widow Catharine Greasy that after shee has satisfied all Just debts and funeral Charges as aforesaid to bequeath and dispose of the Remainder as shee shall think fitt, In Confirmation Whereof I have hereVnto subscribed and affixed the seale of the province the 20th X^r^ 1670."[1]

A few weeks later we find the following entry:

"Joshua Peirce late of Woodbridge, planter, died intestate leaving a widow and two small children behind him, the governor appoints his widow Dorathy Pierce administratrix, to pay and satisfy his just debts, and with power to sue, recover and receipt for debts due him in his lifetime. After she hath satisfied all just debts and funeral charges as aforesaid to dispose of the remainder for the best advantage of herself and her said children as she shall think fit. February 27, 1670."

The next record of the kind is six months later:

"Lawrence Ward, late of Newark, died intestate, without children, leaving only his widow upon his estate; and the said widow, Elizabeth Ward, renounced in favor of her sister Esebell Baldwyn, wife of Joseph Baldwyn, of Hadley in Massachusetts, upon condition that the said Elizabeth Ward, widow, shall enjoy the said whole estate during her life and to dispose of one-third part thereof remaining at the time of her death as she shall think good. The Governor accordingly appoints Isebell Baldwyn administratrix, September 2, 1671.

"Esebell Baldwyn declares that whereas Lawrence Ward, late of Newark, my brother, deceased intestate, etc., leaving a widow, my sister Elizabeth Ward, upon the estate of my deceased brother, I appoint my son John Catlin and John Ward, turner, my kinsman, both of Newark, attorneys to take unto them jointly all my whole power and interest in and to the said estate, etc. September 4, 1671."[1]

In the case of the last will and testament of Hugh Roberts, of Newark, dated February 26, 1670, the record declares that it was signed, sealed and delivered in the presence of Capt. Robert Treat, who makes oath, November 22, 1671, that "this will above mentioned is the last will and testament of the said Hugh Roberts to the best of his knowledge," the proof being made before William Pardon, Deputy Secretary of the Province. There follows the inventory and appraisement, the overseers being sworn before Robert Treat, Magistrate, November 17, 1671. Mary Roberts swears to the inventory, November 22, 1671, "before Robert Treat, by permission of the Governor."[2] In other words, Capt. Treat was authorized to act as deputy surrogate for the Governor, for this purpose.

The last will and testament of Matthew Campfield, of Newark, was witnessed by John Brown, senior, and Tho: Pierson, March 19, 1672–3, and on June 11, 1673, we find that "John Brown sen^{r} & tho Pierson sen^{r} wittnesses hereunto did make oath before me y^{t} this is the Last will & testament of Matthew Campfeild, his own handewriting," this proof being made before John Berry, Deputy Governor at the time. The inventory was sworn to before him the same day, and on June 30, 1673, he granted letters of administration to Sarah Campfield, the widow, sole executrix under the will.[3]

Administration upon the estate of Obadiah Winter, late of Woodbridge, deceased, was granted by Gov. Carteret, April 19, 1675, to Margaret Winter alias Grabum, his wife, sole executrix under the testator's will, dated March 1st, 1674-5.[1]

The will of Martin Tichanor, of Newark, dated October 19, 1681, was proved by the oath of two witnesses, Ephraim Burwell and William Camp, who made oath before James Bollen, Justice, that "they were present as witnesses to the signing and sealing of this last will and testament of Martin Tichanor, deceased." Bollen was also Secretary of the Province of East Jersey, and so in close touch with the Governor, by whom he was doubtless authorized to take the proof of this will. Letters of administration were issued to John Tichanor, executor under the last will and testament of Martin Tichanor, his father, by Governor Philip Carteret, November 14, 1681.[2]

And the next day the Governor granted letters of administration on the estate of Jasper Crane, late of Newark, to John Crane, his son, executor.[3]

From the records of the probate of wills it appears very clearly that the county courts exercised jurisdiction in such matters quite frequently, particularly in West Jersey.

At a "Called Court," held July 5, 1679, for the Whorehill, on the Delaware, an order was made granting a quietus to an administration.[4]

A NEWARK RECORD OF SOME WILLS.

In the Newark Town Book—a miscellaneous record, chiefly of the division of the home lots among the first settlers, later conveyances, bills of sale, etc., 1689–1728—there are nine wills recorded, under the certificate of John Browne, town clerk, as to their correctness.

The first is that of Richard Lawrence, "belonging to the Towne of Newark in East Jersey," witnessed by John Ward

[1] E. J. Wills, Liber 3, p. 111. It will be observed that Obadiah Winter's will bore date March 1, 1675. His bereaved widow proved the will and took out letters of administration on April 19, 1675. Eight days later the Governor issued a marriage license for William Taylor and Margaret Winter, alias Graybum, widow of Obadiah Winter. The "funeral baked meats" did scarce "coldly furnish forth the marriage tables," in this case.

and Steeuen Davis, and appended is the certificate of the proof of the instrument: "Witness sworn before me this 30th of March 1691. Thomas Johnson, Justice."[1]

The will of Joseph Riggs, "of Newark in the Government of New England," dated January 1, 1688–9, has this certificate of proof:

"Appeared before vs, William Camp, John Browne, & Joseph Browne this 27 of November: 1689: and took oath that this is the Last will & testament of Joseph Riggs of Newark Latly deceased

"JOHN WARD Justice

"THOMAS JOHNSON Justice."[2]

This will was subsequently probated, in solemn form, May 16, 1711, and is filed at Trenton.[3] John Johnson and Samuell Camp were witnesses, besides the three named above.

The will of Michaill Tompkins, "of Newark in the Government of New England," had three witnesses. The proof reads thus:

"Vpon the :4th: of December: 1690: appeared before us John Browne & took oath that according to the best of his knowledge this is the Last will of Michaill Tompkins seniʳ Lately deceased

"JOHN WARD Justice

"THOMAS JOHNSON Justice."

"Thomas Browne also took oath accordingly before me yᵉ :5: december 1690

"THOMAS JOHNSON Justice."[4]

John Baldwin, "of Newark in the Government of New England" made his will December 25, 1688. It was proved before a single Justice, thus:

"Appeared before me John Curtis & John Browne this 28 of November 1689 & took oath that this is to the best of their knowledg the Last will & Testament of John Baldwin of Newark Lately Deceased

"THOMAS JOHNSON Justice."[5]

The following entry is interesting, as showing the simple and apparently entirely satisfactory method of getting an authoritative construction of a will:

"Whereas William Camp & Seth Tompkins overseers of the Last will of John Baldwin deceased, convinced[1] the Justices of Newark together (namely Mr John Ward, & Mr Thomas Johnson) to give their sence & Approbation of what might be most sutable to the settling of what Lands belong to the heire.

The will of David Ogden, "of Newark in the Province of East Jersey," dated December 26, 1691, was proved before Justices Ward and Johnson, February 27, 1691–2, by the oath of Samuell Harrison, "Mr Patrick ffalconar being deceased."[3]

The will of John Browne, of Newark, dated December 17, 1689, was proved December 4, 1690, by the oaths of John Browne, junior, and John Denison, before Justices Ward and Johnson.[4]

"The Last will and testement of mee Sarah Davis in hope of Eternal Life throw Jesus Christ my Lord," dated March 27, 1691, was proved May 16, 1691, by the oaths of Stephen Davis and Edward Ball, before Thomas Johnson, Justice.[5]

The will of Samuel Swaine, proved at New York, March 17, 1681–2, was recorded in the Newark Town Book, and immediately following is the inventory of the estate of Mrs. Joanna Swaine, deceased, his widow, December 15, 1694.[6] Her will, dated March 25, 1692, was proved December 10,

FIRST NEW JERSEY LEGISLATION REGARDING WILLS.

The "Concessions and Agreements of the Proprietors, Freeholders and Inhabitants of the Province of West New Jersey, in America," dated March 3, 1676–7, contained among the common law or fundamental rights of that province careful provisions "for securing Estates of Persons that die, and taking care of Orphans," the first clause of which made this regulation regarding the probate of wills:

"If any person or persons die, the commissioners are to take care that the will of the deceased be duly performed, and security given by those that prove the will: And that all wills or testaments be registered in a public register appointed for that purpose, and the person and persons that prove the same, to bring in one true inventory under their hands of all the estate of the deceased, and to have a warrant under the hands of three commissioners, and the publick seal of the province, intimating that they have brought in an inventory of the estate, and given security. Then and not before, are they to dispose upon the estate."[2]

This was embodied in a statute passed at a session of the "General Free Assembly of the Province of West New Jersey, in America," held at Burlington, November 21–28, 1681, as follows:

"XI. That when any person or persons die, and have made a will and were in a capacity of so doing, the Governor, and commissioners, for the time being, are to take care that the will of the deceased be duly performed, and security given by him or them that prove the will; and that all wills and testaments, be registered in a publick register appointed for that purpose; and that the person or persons, who shall prove the same, shall bring in one true inventory, under the hands of two or more appraisers, of all the estate of the deceased, and shall have a warrant or license, under the hand of three justices for the time being, under the publick seal of the province, intimating and declaring, that he or they have brought in an inventory of the estate, and given security for the true performance of the will, then and not before, he or they may enter upon and dispose of the estate."[1]

The East Jersey Assembly enacted March 21, 1682–3:

"XX. That all wills in writing, attested by two credible witnesses, shall be of the same force to convey lands, as other conveyance being registered in the Secretaries office within this Province, within forty days after the testator's death."[2]

An act of March 13, 1698–9, slightly modified this provision as follows:

"All wills in writing and attested by three or more credible witnesses shall be of the same force to convey lands as other conveyances, being proved and registered in the publick records, within sixty days after the testator's death. And in case of neglect the executor, or executors shall be liable to citation, and fined two shillings for each citation, and eighteen pence for each fine."[3]

JURISDICTION OF THE GOVERNOR AND COUNCIL.

It will be observed that the authority to take proofs of wills and inventories and appraisements was usually exercised by someone designated for the purpose by the Governor. In some cases, however, original jurisdiction was exercised by the Governor and Council, as the following extracts from their records will show:

March 3, 1682–3: "Lawrence Andress tendring the adm'istracon of James Bollens Estate appraism^t and sale might bee Entred in the Secretarys office. vpon view thereof

Abel Porter, jun., of Boston, having died on the voyage from Scotland to East Jersey, his widow obtained letters of administration, March 4, 1685-6, from the Court of Suffolk county, Mass., and on April 22 following was also granted similar letters by the Governor of East Jersey.[3]

When the will (dated 23d 9th mo. 1683) of Richard Leppincott, of Monmouth county, was offered for probate, Jan. 2, 1683-4, a special commission was appointed by the Governor to examine the widow, Abigail Lippincott, in reference to the instrument,[4] instead of having the matter adjudicated by a Deputy Surrogate, or by a Court.

The Governor frequently asserted his authority over the persons and estates of infants. When Hanse Harmensen, of Constaple's Point, Bergen county, by a codicil, dated Oct. 19, 1700, appointed guardians over his grandson, an order was made by the Governor, Dec. 3, 1701, confirming the appointment.[1] On the same day he admitted two persons as guardians of George Darling, of Woodbridge.[2]

He exercised like power over insane persons, as when (February 15, 1692–3) he appointed the wife and daughter (and the husband of the latter) of Samuel Hooton as his guardians, the said Hooton being "rendred uncapable to act through a distemper of lunacy."[3]

PREROGATIVE JURISDICTION.

As the jurisdiction of the Governor of New Jersey and the Governors of East and West Jersey, respectively, extended over the whole of their several governments, their powers as Ordinary were sufficient for controlling the administration of estates within their domains, and a will, administration or guardianship, proved or granted by the Governor or a surrogate appointed by him was valid, without regard to where the goods lay.[4]

The prerogative of the Archbishop of Canterbury was occasionally called into requisition, as in the following instances:

The Rev. John Allen, the settled minister at Woodbridge, having died in the latter part of 1683, letters of administration were granted to his son John, by the Archbishop of Canterbury, April 15, 1685. The instrument, which is in Latin, describes the residence of the deceased as being "the Island of New Jersey."[5] The venerable prelate had a better knowledge of his prerogative than of the geography of America.

Edward Barker, of London, made his will, August 30, 1686, in which he named his father and his father-in-law, both of London, executors. He had debts due him in America, and on his death his executors obtained letters of administration, with will annexed, from the Archbishop of Canterbury.[6]

Hugh Buchanan, of Bristol, England, mariner, married the widow Jeane Wilke, of the same place, to whom in 1688 was devised a large tract of land on Alloways creek, Salem county. Her husband died in Barbados, in the West Indies. She married again, Sept. 15, 1696. Benjamin Burgesse, at Bristol, and on October 15, 1697, she took out letters of administration from the Archbishop of Canterbury on the estate of her late husband in New Jersey.[1]

DEPUTY SURROGATES.

Instances have been cited showing that the proofs of wills and inventories were frequently made before persons authorized by the Governor to act in his absence.

Thomas Gordon was the first person duly appointed Surrogate for East Jersey, his commission being dated March 8, 1693-4. He was again appointed December 18, 1700. From an instrument dated July 31, 1694, it appears that his formal title was "commissioner for taking the probate of last wills." By that instrument he certified that a certain person had properly administered an estate.[2]

NUNCUPATIVE WILLS.

Notwithstanding the statute of 29 Chas. II., cap. 3, hereinbefore recited, requiring wills to be in writing, witnessed by three persons, nuncupative or spoken wills were admitted to probate in Colonial times, there being at least twenty-eight of such wills noted in this volume. For some reason, not apparent on the surface, this form of will was more usual in West Jersey than in East Jersey. Of the twenty-eight wills mentioned, fifteen were in Salem county, four in Gloucester, three in Burlington, and one in Cape May—a total of twenty-three in West Jersey. Of the other five, two were in Middlesex, two in Monmouth and one in Essex. In point of time, they range from 1685 to 1724.

Naturally, these nuncupative wills were usually the dying declarations of the testators expressing their wishes as to the disposition of their property. Generally, they were offered for probate within a few days. Sometimes the family did not wait for the death before taking the preliminary steps to administer upon the estate, as in the case of Caleb Carman, senior, of Burlington county, whose will was uttered August 5, 1693, attested before Joseph Houldin and Samuel Crowell, Justices, by affidavit of John Gervis and Caleb Carman, leaving all to his wife Elizabeth. His estate had been inventoried a month before, or on July 7. Letters of administration were granted to his widow, August 16.[1]

There was a singular confusion over the will of John Denn, of Allawayes Creek, who died at or before June 24, 1685, having "spoken" his will before George Deacon, Commissioner, that he gave his whole estate to his widow for life, with remainder to his children. Administration was granted to his widow, May 3, 1686, by five Justices, but on February 15 following three of the Justices entered a notice that these letters of administration were granted "thoroe the Mistake of William Wilkinson Clark to y^e^ s^d^ Court there being a Nuncupative Will proved. Therefore y^e^ s^d^ afores^d^ p^r^ceedings are null and voyd by judgm^t^ of Court."[2]

Two witnesses swore, June 1, 1689, that on May 4, 1689, they had heard Marcus Lawrence, of Putshack, Gloucester county, say that he had sent for John Taylor to write his will, but feeling that he should speedily die he asked his wife if she would stay with his children; she desiring to consult with her own son, he appointed three friends to manage his whole estate and divide it between his wife and two children.

Haunce Sheiahel, of Penn's Neck, Salem county, planter, chose, of all places, to "speak" his will at the wedding of Nicholas Philpot, before three witnesses, but it was not until May 12, 1692, that administration on his estate was granted and an inventory taken.[3]

The estate of Moses Huestis, of Amwelbury, Salem county, was inventoried 15th of 9th mo. (November), 1694; his will was spoken the next day.[4]

2 Salem Wills, Liber No. 2, pp. 20, 24.

3 Salem Wills, Liber A, p. 75.

4 Salem Wills, Liber A, p. 132.

Sometimes these spoken wills were proved by the oaths of two witnesses, but the nuncupative will of Andrew Howman, of Rapahaking, Gloucester, made September, 1700, was substantiated by the affidavits of five witnesses, who moreover declared that "ther might at Least a dozen more be procured."

The scrivener who took down the will of Christopher Wetherill, of Mansfield township, Burlington county, March 25, 1711, certifies that "The withIn written Wass Taken in Wrighting from the Testators mouth y^e^ Very Substance of all Deuise Butt Nott in forme," and the will was admitted to probate April 6, 1711.[1]

John Pentlen, of Monmouth county, uttered his will on June 23, 1719, and John McDowell swore that a few days and then again a few hours before his death Pentlen had said he wished Henry Ross and family to have what he left. His personal estate was inventoried the same day by Adam Hude and the said McDowell.[2]

"LETTERS TESTIMONIAL."

In a number of instances in the early records of wills it is stated that "letters testimonial" were issued. From the following, it would seem that the expression is used where letters of administration were granted with will annexed, although in this particular case the letters were issued to the executor named in the will. The meaning of the expression seems to be, that letters were issued to the executor or administrator as a testimonial (i. e., in testimony) of his authority to act.

"To all Christian people & others whatsoever to whom these our Letters Testimoniall shall come, or whom the premises shall or may Concerne The governor & proprietors of the province of East New Jersey send Greeting Now Know yee That the twelfth day of Aprill in the year of Our Lord One thousand six hundred Eighty and Eight The annexed last will & testament of Mary Mitchell late of Elizabethtown widdow deceased, was tendered proved & approved before us, And she the s^d^ Mary Mitchell having whilst she lived divers and sun-

Letters testimonial with will annexed were issued September 1, 1692, to the executrix of Major William Sandford, of New Barbados, deceased.[2] Many other cases could be cited.[3]

THE PROBATE OF WILLS IN THE PROVINCIAL ERA.

The memorial of the Proprietors of the Province of East New Jersey to the Lords of Trade in regard to the proposed surrender of the Government to the Crown suggested that among the rights and privileges that should be confirmed to the proprietors and planters respectively, in the event of the surrender, was the following:

"XI. That all Wills of Persons dying within East-Jersey, and Letters of Administration of Estates lying there, may be made and granted by the chief Judge of East-Jersey for the Time being, who is to reside there, and a Register thereof kept at Perth-Amboy."[4]

After the surrender of the government of East Jersey and West Jersey to the Crown, and the appointment of Lord Cornbury as Governor, in his instructions, dated November 16, 1702, the probate of wills was expressly reserved to him as Governor and the commander-in-chief of the province for the time being. The precise language was this:

"75. And to the end the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of the said lord bishop of London, may take place in our said province so far as conveniently may be, we do think fit that you give all countenance and encouragement to the exercise of the same, excepting only the collating to benefices, granting licenses for marriages, and probate of wills, which we have reserved to you our governor and the commander in chief of our said province for the time being."[1]

Thus the Governor "was not only ordinary, but metropolitan of the province. He had no superior but the queen in council.[2] His court was called the prerogative court, an appellation applied in England to the archbishop's court. Nor had he any subordinates; his jurisdiction over these subjects was sole and exclusive. This constitution of the court continued till the revolution, and was adopted by the convention which framed the constitution of the state in seventeen hundred and seventy-six. For one hundred and forty years the governor or ordinary was the only judge of probate known to the constitution of New Jersey.

"But at an early day the provincial governors, for their own and the people's convenience, appointed deputies, with the name of surrogates, residing in different parts of the province, to act in their stead, upon such cases as the people chose to submit to them. Sometimes there were more than one in a county, sometimes only one for two or three counties. They were mere deputies, subject to the control and supervision of the ordinary, and to be removed at his pleasure. By appointing them the ordinary did not in the least curtail his own jurisdiction. Whilst he held appellate jurisdiction of their acts, his own original jurisdiction remained entire.

"These surrogates did not hold to the ordinary the relation which the English ordinaries hold to their metropolitan. The English ordinary has exclusive jurisdiction where the goods of the deceased are all situated in his diocese; and the metropolitan has exclusive jurisdiction where notable goods are situated in two or more dioceses. No relation of this kind subsisted between the ordinary and surrogates of New Jersey. The ordinary retained jurisdiction of all cases. The surrogate, acting as his deputy, had also jurisdiction of all cases submitted to him, unless some special restriction were inserted in his commission. New Jersey was never subdivided into dioceses. The doctrine of bona notabilia had never any place here.

"The power of the ordinary to appoint these officers, seems never to have been questioned. Their acts were recognized by the courts, and they came to be considered as lawful and competent judges of the matters submitted to their cognizance."[1]

Governor Cornbury arrived in New York, May 3, 1702, to assume the government of that Province. His commission as Governor of New Jersey, dated December 5, 1702, did not reach him until July 29, 1703, and on August 10, 1703, he proceeded to his new government, and published his commission at Perth Amboy on the 11th, and at Burlington on the 13th.[2] He took the proofs of wills personally, in New York, in some cases of New Jersey wills, by the oaths of one or more of the subscribing witnesses. In other cases he granted letters of administration on the certificate of two justices that the wills had been proved before them. About September, 1702, he appointed Dr. John Bridges, of New York, to act as his surrogate in taking the proofs of wills, inventories, etc.[1] Some time after, or on February 28, 1703–4, he appointed a surrogate to act for him "to administer oaths to persons suing out letters of administration," etc., in New Jersey, his choice for the office being Thomas Revell,[2] a favorite of his Lordship then and afterwards, and living at Burlington, where he kept the Secretary's office of the Province, being also Register of the West Jersey Proprietors. He instituted the system of keeping the records of wills, administrations and guardianships in books provided exclusively for those purposes. Although the two Divisions or Provinces of East Jersey and West Jersey were now united into a single Province, under one Governor, the precedent followed for twenty years or more was not easily to be disregarded, and as the land records of the two Divisions were still kept in separate offices—at Burlington and Perth Amboy—so separate sets of books were provided for the records of wills, etc., those for East Jersey being numbered, while letters were used to designate those for West Jersey. The first record of the probate of a will in New Jersey under Lord Cornbury is found in East Jersey Wills, Liber No. 1, page 1, in the office of the Secretary of State, whither the records of conveyances and wills, in the Proprietors' offices at Burlington and Perth Amboy, were transferred when the State capital was finally located at Trenton, in 1790. This interesting probate record is as follows:

"The jurisdiction of the governor as the ordinary of New Jersey, before the revolution and since, extended throughout the state, and a will, administration or guardianship proved or granted by himself or a surrogate, (and he appointed as many as he chose to do,) was valid, without regard to the place where the goods lay. Hence he possessed the prerogative powers of the ecclesiastical jurisdiction, in these particulars."—4 Griffith's Law Reg., 1185-6.

"Edward Vicount Cornbury Captain Generall and Gouvernor in Chief, in and over ye Province of Nova Cesarea New Yorke.

The will of John Symkam was proved before Lord Cornbury in New York, February 21, 1702-3. By order of the Queen, August 8, 1702, Governor Cornbury appointed Bridges to the office of Chief Justice of New York, in April, 1703. The will of Nathaniel Pearsall, a Quaker, was proved before John Bridges, Secretary, March 3, 1703-4. In a letter of November 6, 1704, Lord Cornbury mentions the death of Dr. Bridges. INCONVENIENCES IN PROBATING WILLS.

In a remonstrance of the Assembly of New Jersey to Lord Cornbury, May 5, 1707, among the evils enumerated by them as existing in the administration was this:

"The only Office for Probate of Wills being in Burlington, it must be very expensive and inconvenient for Persons, who live remote, especially for the whole Eastern Division.

We therefore pray the Governour to assent to an Act to settle such an Office in every County or at least in each Division of this Province, and that the Officers may be men of Good Estates and known Integrity in the said County or Division."[1]

Lord Cornbury replied at great length, May 12, 1707, to the bitter attacks of the Assembly, and on the subject of the probate office had this to say:

"The office of Probate of wills, is wherever the Governor is, Consequently not at Burlington only, Ever Since the Queen has done me the honour to Entrust me with the Government of this province I have never failed of being in the Province twice every year, once at Burlington and once at Amboy. . . . . I was twise in Amboy last yeare, where anybody that had a Will to prove, might have had it done if they had pleased. Besides my being twice every year in the Province Considering the Remoteness of Cape May County and the County of Salem, I did appoint a Surrogate at Burlington[2] before whome any of the Inhabitants of Either Division might have had their Wills proved, I did not think it Necessary to appoint one in the Eastern Division, because the Inhabitants of that Division who are most Remote from New Yorke are within a very easy days Journey of my Surrogate at Burlington, and much the Major part of the people of that Division are within a small day's Journey of New Yorke, where their private affairs dayly calls many of them, and where any of them may have their wills proved without any Injury to or Incroachment upon their Properties, Rights or privileges.[3]

The House retorted in this vein, on October 29, 1707:

"We thought the only office for probate of Wills was at Burlington, but your Excellcy has Convinct us that it is wherever your Excellcy is, and Consequently may be at Yorke, Albany, the East end Long Island, or in Connecticut or New England, or any place more remote Should your Excellency business or Inclination call you there which is So farr from Making it less a grievance that it Makes it more So, and notwithstanding those Soft, Cool and Considerate termes of Malicious Scandalous and frivolous with which your Excelle^{cy} Vouchsafes to treat the assembly of this Province they are of opinion that no Judicious or Impartiall men will think it reasonable that the Inhabitants of one Province Should goe into another to have their Wills proved, and take letters of Administration at fort Anne from the Goven^{r} of New Yorke, for what Should Regularly be done by the Governour of New Jersey in Jersey, to which place all the acts of Government relating to New Jersey are limited by the Queen's Letters pattent under the great Seale of England, and when your Excellency is absent from new Jersey to be Executed by the Lieutenant gov^{r}, and by the s^{d} letters Pattents Not the least collour of authority is given to your Excellency, to doe any act of Government relating to New Jersey, anywhere but in Jersey, Nor is there any Instructions (that we know of) Contradicting the said Letters Pattents, anywhere upon Record in this province, to warrant your Excellency's Conduct in that affaire.

"If this be not Cause and just cause of Complaint we doe not know what is, we are inclined to believe the Province of New Yorke, would think it Soe were they to come to Amboy or Burlington to prove wills, &c.

"We doe not think that what we desire is an Invation of the Queen's Right, but what her Majesty without Infringement of her Prerogative Royall may assent to, and their late Majesty's of blessed Memory did by their Governour Coll Fletcher assent to an Act made in New Yorke in the yeare 1692 Entitled an act for the Supervising of Intestate Estates, and Regulating the Probate of Wills, and granting Letters of administration[1] by which the Court of Common pleas in the

Y. Col. Docs.*, VII., 324. The bill was introduced April 28, 1691, and passed by the House May 2, but was not passed until November 14, 1692.—Journal of the General Assembly of New York, New York, 1764, I., 9, 21, 28. The Governor and the Assembly were at swords' points on this and every other matter of administration, and nothing came of this demand for better probate facilities in the Province, during his time.

When Lord Lovelace was appointed Governor of the Province to succeed Lord Cornbury, the Lords of Trade, in sending him her Majesty's instructions, on June 28, 1708, referred to this complaint of the New Jersey Assembly, commenting favorably upon the remonstrance, in the following language:

"'Tis true that the probate of Wills and Granting of Letters of Administration, is by Her Majesty, entrusted with the Governor; Yet we do not see that the settling such an office in each Division in New Jersey, as proposed by the Remonstrance for the Ease of Her Majesty's Subjects there will be a lessning of the Rights of Prerogative, or of the Governor."[2]

Lord Lovelace lived too short a time to carry out the proposed reform, but his successor, Colonel Robert Hunter, acceded to the wishes of the people.[3] After the custom of the day, the Grand Jury for the Counties of Middlesex and Somerset, at the sessions held at Perth Amboy, the fourth Tuesday in May, 1712, adopted an address to the Governor, commending his administration for several of his acts, among them:

James Kirkpatrick, surrogate, East Jersey, Dec. 19, 1774.

Daniel Isaac Browne, surrogate, East Jersey, Dec. 20, 1774.

A commission was issued by Governor Josiah Hardy, March 22, 1762, to Charles Read, Samuel Allinson and Gabriel Blond, of the City of Burlington, John Ladd of the County of Gloucester, George Trenchard of the County of Salem, Maskell Ewing of the County of Cumberland, Henry Young of the County of Cape May, Theophilus Severns of the County of Hunterdon, and Aaron Doud of the County of Sussex, to be surrogates of the Prerogative Court in the Western Division of the Province of New Jersey, each of them to have all powers and authorities to the said office belonging, and to hold the same during the will and pleasure of the Governor.

A similar commission was granted by him the same day to Charles Read, John Smyth and Jonathan Doane, of the City of Perth Amboy, Anthony White and James Hude, Junr., of the City of New Brunswick, Robert Ogden of Elizabeth Town, Uzal Ogden and Lewis Ogden of Newark, John Sobrisco (Zabriskie) of the County of Bergen, Jacob Dennis and Samuel Leonard of the County of Monmouth, appointing them and each of them surrogates of the Prerogative Court in the Eastern Division of the Province of New Jersey, to hold the same during his will and pleasure.[1]

ROYAL ENCROACHMENT ON THE GOVERNOR'S PREROGATIVE.

Although by the instructions given from time to time to the several Governors of New Jersey they were vested with full power in the matter of the probate of wills, etc., and by virtue of that power had been in the habit of appointing their own surrogates, an important departure from this practice occurred when Maurice Morgann was granted a patent by the King, under the Great Seal of Great Britain, bearing date at Westminster, June 18, 1767, for the offices of "Secretary, Clerk of the Council, Clerk of the Supreme Court, Clerk of the Pleas, Surrogate and keeper and register of records, in the Colony of Nova Cæsarea or New Jersey in America," to have, hold, exercise and enjoy the said offices unto him by himself or his sufficient deputy or deputies, for whom he should be answerable, during the royal pleasure. Morgann was evidently the protege of some court favorite. He resided in Parliament street, Westminster, London, and not being disposed to relinquish the pleasures of London life, he appointed Joseph Reed, Jr., (afterwards Washington's Adjutant-General) to be his deputy in said offices during the pleasure of the said Morgann.[1] This instrument bears date June 27, 1767. Reed qualified October 10, 1767, before Charles Read, one of the Justices of the Supreme Court of New Jersey.[2] This seems a little singular in view of the fact that Charles Read at this time held the office of Register of the Prerogative Court, by appointment of Governor Franklin.

At a meeting of the Governor and his Council, of whom Charles Read was one, at Burlington, November 13, 1767, Joseph Reed produced an exemplification of the commission of Maurice Morgann as Clerk of the Council, and the instrument under the hand and seal of the said Maurice Morgann appointing Reed as Deputy, and qualified and was admitted as Deputy Clerk. The Governor then acquainted the Council that Reed had made a claim, as Deputy Secretary and Register of the Province, for the seals and records of the Prerogative Court, and had requested the Governor as Judge of the said court to deliver them to him; that a claim of the said office of Register of the Prerogative Court was also made by Charles Read, and as the welfare and interest of the province greatly depended upon the due regulation of the said court and its offices, his Excellency prayed the advice of the Council thereon. The next day the Governor stated that Charles Read had agreed that if an order under the seal of the Prerogative Court was produced to him, he would deliver up the records of the Prerogative Court to the person therein appointed to receive them, saving to himself the right of further prosecuting his claim if he should think it expedient. The Council thereupon thought it unnecessary to consider farther the merits of the claims, but advised the Governor to issue such order and to transact the business of the Court with the said Joseph Reed in the usual and accustomed manner.[3]

The Governor naturally disliking to provoke a controversy with the royal appointing power complacently issued a commission to Joseph Reed, November 19, 1767, in which, after referring to the royal letters patent, he added: "Whereas,

[1] Joseph Reed, junior, studied law in the Middle Temple, London, from December, 1763, until the spring of 1765.—Reed's Reed, I., 28. It was probably through friendships formed there and then that he secured this appointment.

Executors and Administrators, and their Accounts to State, Examine and Approve, allow and discharge and Quietus Est thereupon to give and grant, and generally to do execute and perform all such Acts and things as to the said Office of Surrogate" did belong and appertain, so long as he should continue as such deputy under the said Maurice Morgann under the appointment aforesaid, saving and reserving nevertheless as Ordinary of the said Province "all Judicial power in Controverted Cases, according to the Usage and Custom of the said Province."[1]

This act of the King, in appointing to so important an office a person who never intended to administer its duties in person, but only by a deputy, while he reaped the emoluments and spent them three thousand miles away, following so closely after the Stamp Act, was another of those irksome exercises of authority that made more restive an already dissatisfied people.

SOME PROVINCIAL ACTS.

Among the very few acts passed by the Legislature, before the Revolution, having any relation to the administration of estates, was the following, passed March 17, 1713–14:

An act confirming Letters of Administration, granted, and to be granted within this Province.

SECT. 1. Whereas Her Sacred Majesty hath reserved to her respective Governors or Commanders in Chief of this her Colony of New-Jersey, the Collating to Benefices, granting Licenses for Marriages, Probates of Wills, and granting Letters of Administration,

[1] N. J. Archives, X., pp 8-10. Two years later, or on October 27, 1769, Morgann, being then in New Jersey, appointed Charles Pettit, who was a deputy under Reed, to succeed the latter as his deputy in the offices of Secretary of the Province, Clerk of the Council, Clerk of the Supreme Court, Clerk of the Pleas, Surrogate and Keeper and Register of the Records of the Province, etc.; revoking, at the same time, the previous appointment of Reed.—N. J. Archives, X., 132. It is probable that Reed's personal affairs and his law practice now demanded all his time, and that the appointment of his successor was made at his request, Mr. Pettit having married his half-sister.—Reed's Reed, I., 40. No other mention of Mr. Morgann has been found in the records.

ent or any preceding Governor or Commander in Chief, or by any other Person or Persons that heretofore have been empowered to grant the same, or that hereafter shall be granted within this Colony by the present or any succeeding Governor or Commander in Chief, or by any Person or Persons empowered by him or them, all such Letters of Administration heretofore granted, or hereafter to be granted by the Authority aforesaid, shall only be, and are hereby declared to be, and at all Times hereafter shall be taken, deemed and esteemed to be good and valid in the Law, to all Intents and Purposes, according to the true Intent and Desiga of them, and every of them respectively, and shall not be Superseded or Reversed by any other Administration whatsoever, granted, or to be granted, for Estates within this Colony, excepting by such Administration as shall be granted by the Authority aforesaid.[1]

"An Act for the speedy recovery of legacies," etc., passed July 8, 1730, provided that legatees might sue or prosecute an action of debt or detinue for such legacy, after it should become due; if it amounted to the value of twenty pounds or upwards, in the Supreme Court of the province or any other court of record; if upwards of forty shillings and under twenty pounds, in any of the courts of common pleas; if of the value of forty shillings or under, before any justice of the peace. The respective courts where said actions might be commenced, upon the plea of want of assets to pay all the debts of the legacies, were directed to appoint auditors to examine the accounts of the executors, who, after full hearing, with due notice to all parties, should procure the auditors aforesaid to report how the accounts of the executors stood, and the court was then authorized to award execution upon the judgment to be had in the suit for the proportion of assets that ought to go towards paying the legacies; and the court was also authorized to correct and amend any mistakes or errors that might happen in the accounts so reported. Provision was likewise made for a reasonable demand to be first made of the executor or executors before any such suit could be maintained, and also for giving to the executors a refunding bond. The act was to remain in force for a limited time, before the expiration of which it was continued forever, by another act passed March 15, 1738-9.[1]

This act was repealed and replaced by "An Act for the more speedy Recovery of Legacies in this Province, and for affirming such Acts of Administrators bona Fide done before Notice of a Will," passed March 11, 1774. This authorized suits for legacies amounting to the value of £15 or upwards to be brought in the Supreme Court, or any other court of record, and made some other slight changes in the previous statute.[2] The act was further slightly modified in the revision of March 27, 1874.[3]

FEES OF THE PREROGATIVE OFFICE.

Soon after Lord Cornbury's accession as Governor of New Jersey he, with the advice of his Council, drew up and published "An Ordinance for Establishing Courts of Judicature."[4] The resolution of the Council for establishing the Courts mentioned in the Ordinance was adopted August 18, 1703.[5] The Ordinance was printed by William Bradford, at New York, in 1704, making four pages folio.[6]

In this connection, Lord Cornbury also prescribed the fees for services rendered in the several Courts, and these were published at the same time by William Bradford, in a separate pamphlet of four pages folio, entitled: "A Catalogue of Fees established By the Governour & Council for the Province of New-Jarsey."[6] The fees of the Prerogative Court were as follows:

This Ordinance was reprinted in 1714,[1] in connection with "An Act Enforcing the Observation of the Ordinance for establishing Fees within this Province," passed March 17, 1713–14, and subsequently disallowed by the King, January 20, 1721–2.[2]

A new "Ordinance for Regulating & Establishing Fees Within this his Majesty's Province of New Jersey," was passed by Governor William Burnet, November 26, 1723, and was printed by William Bradford, at New York, in 1724, in a pamphlet of fourteen folio pages.[1] Another Ordinance on the same subject was published in 1727.[1] The first Act of the Legislature establishing fees was passed December 2, 1743, but failed to receive the royal approval.[3]

The following fees were allowed by an act passed February 17, 1747–8, and confirmed by the King in Council, November 23, 1749:

Engrossing a Will and Probate, to be done in Parchment, for each Sheet containing fifteen Lines and six Words in a Line, ten pence per Sheet.

Taking Depositions to a Will, and Recording the Will, each Sheet containing fifteen Lines, and six Words to a Line, seven pence per Sheet.

WILLS AS CONVEYANCES OF LANDS.

Mention has been made (p. xxxviii, ante) of acts passed in 1683 and 1699, providing that wills in writing, duly witnessed, and registered in the public records, should be of the same force to convey lands as other conveyances. To the same end was this more elaborate act passed March 17, 1713–14:

"An Act for confirming of Conveyances of lands made and to be made by Wills and Powers of Attorney, and declaring what Exemplifications of Records and other Things shall be holden and received for good Evidence of Estates of Inheritance, and for Transfering of Uses into possession.

"Sect. 1. Whereas on and several Years after the first Settlement of this Colony, the great distance of Plantations, and scarcity of Inhabitants was such, that it was difficult to get more than two Witnesses to be present at the Signing, Sealing and Acknowledging of Last Wills and Testaments, which induced the then Legislature of the Province of East-Jersey, now the Eastern-Division of this Province, in the Year One Thousand Six Hundred and Eighty Two, to make a Law declaring, that all Wills in Writing, attested by two credible Witnesses, shall be of the same force to convey lands as other Conveyances.

"And whereas Pursuant to the said Law, many Wills have been made, Bequeathing and Devising Lands, signed by the Testator, and attested only by two subscribing Witnesses.

"2. Be it therefore Enacted by the Governor, Council and General Assembly, and by the Authority of the same, That all last Wills and Testaments heretofore made in Writing, signed by the Testator, In Presence of two subscribing Witnesses, and proved according to the Custom heretofore used in either the Eastern or Western-Divisions of this Province, by which any Lands, Tenements or Hereditaments have been given, devised or bequeathed unto any Person or Persons whatsoever, every of the said last Wills and Testaments shall, at all times hereafter, be held, taken, deemed and esteemed as good, valid and sufficient Title in the Law, to all Intents, Constructions and Purposes, as if the Testator had conveyed the same away in his Life-Time, and shall forever bar any Person or Persons claiming or to claim Estate under any such Testator, contrary to the true Intent and Meaning of such Will and Testament: and the said Will being proved as aforesaid, and the Books of Registers of either of the Eastern or Western-Divisions of this Province in which they were entered, being proved as aforesaid, may be given, and shall be received in Evidence, any Law or Custom to the contrary notwithstanding.

"3. And be it Enacted by the authority aforesaid, That all Wills and Testaments which hereafter shall be made in some doubts have arisen on the said Appointment and on the Power of the said Maurice Morgann to make a Deputy as to the Office of Surrogate: In order therefore That His Majesty's Gracious Intentions in the said Patent expressed may have full Effect within this Colony and the deputation of the said Maurice Morgann Esq. may not in respect to the Surrogate's Office, be disputed," he therefore appointed said Reed to be provincial and principal Surrogate of the Province of New Jersey, and disallowed and made void all former commissions theretofore granted to surrogates in said province, giving him full power and authority in the stead and place of the Governor, "to swear or Affirm the witnesses to Last Wills and Testaments, to Admit Administrations on the Estates of Persons dying Intestate, and to Administer the Oaths or Affirmations to

"4. And be it enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Copies of any Last Will or Testament whatsoever heretofore made, or hereafter to be made, within any Part of the Kingdoms of Great-Britain or Ireland, by which any Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, or other Estate within this Province, are devised or bequeathed, certified under the Seal of such Office where such Will or Testament is proved and lodged, may be given, and shall be received in Evidence, before any of the Courts of Judicature within this Province, and be esteemed as valid and sufficient as if the original Will or Testament were then and there produced and proved.

"5. And be it enacted by the Authority aforesaid, That the Copy of any Will or Testament, made in any other of her Majesty's Colonies, by which any Lands, Tenements, Hereditaments, or other Estate within this Province is given, devised or bequeathed, being proved according to the Custom of such Colony, certified under the Great Seal of such Colony, may be given, and shall be received in Evidence in any of the Courts of Judicature within this Province, and be esteemed as valid and sufficient as if the original Will or Testament were then and there produced and proved."[2]

This act impressed upon landowners the importance of having wills recorded, in case they devised lands.

A COMPLICATED ADMINISTRATION.

The limitations of the Prerogative Court in administering upon an insolvent estate in the early days find an illustration in the following case: Captain John Bowne, of Mattawan, Middletown, Monmouth county, made his will, September 14, 1714. After making a number of bequests, among others to William Hartshorne's oldest children, he gave the rest of his real and personal property to his brothers, Obadiah Bowne and Richard Saltar, whom he also appointed executors. The will was proved April 11, 1716. The personal estate was appraised at £16,982.5.0, mostly in book debts. Owing to certain difficulties in settling up the estate, the Legislature, on March 27, 1719, passed "An Act to enforce the due Administration of the Estate of Captain John Bowne, deceased, late of the County of Monmouth." Obadiah received his share of the residue, and left a will, proved April 25, 1726. The book-debts due John's estate proved uncollectible, and Hartshorne's heirs failing to receive what they considered to be coming to them filed a bill in chancery to compel Richard Saltar, the surviving executor, to pay. A decree was given in their favor, a copy served on the defendant and demand made for the money, which, however, was not paid. The Hartshornes thereupon applied to the Governor and Council, February 1, 1727–8, for leave to put in suit Saltar's bond given for the administration of Bowne's estate, in order for the recovery of the money decreed. An order was made for Saltar to show cause accordingly the following Monday. On that day, February 7, 1727–8, Saltar petitioned the Governor and Council to have the bond given by his co-executor, Obadiah Bowne, to pay the half of the debts and legacies due by the estate of John Bowne, put in suit. Both sides were heard, and an order was then made that a copy of the bond be given to Saltar that the same might be put in suit in the Supreme Court, and in case of judgment thereon

the Supreme Court should "Direct by proper rules that the Execut^ns from time to time on Such Judgment Shall only Issue for what Shall be Justly Incumbend on the Obligors to pay and that by directing the Auditing of Accounts & takeing Such other methods as Shall be agreable to Equity & Justice." A like order was made in the case of the Hartshornes, legatees of John Bowne, and Lawrence, one of the creditors of said Bowne, and the executors of Obadiah Bowne, against Richard Saltar, surviving executor of John Bowne, and the joint obligors with him.[1] These proceedings are interesting, as showing the cumbersome and expensive method of administering upon the estate. The aid of virtually three courts was invoked to adjudicate the matters at issue. And yet the procedure has not been so greatly simplified in the nearly two centuries that have since elapsed.

SPECIAL REMEDIAL ACTS OF THE LEGISLATURE.

The foregoing instance shows that the Prerogative Court lacked many of the powers and functions which have been vested in it by wise legislation in later years. The aid of the Court of Chancery was often invoked to assist executors and administrators in the discharge of their duties, but not infrequently it was found necessary to appeal to the Legislature for relief, and we find such acts passed from time to time as these:

An Act to enable the Executors of Miles Forster, late of Perth Amboy in the County of Middlesex, Merchant, deceased, to sell Lands to pay Debts and Legacies, according to the Last Will and Testament of the said deceased. Passed March 15, 1713–14.[2]

ment of the said Robert Edwards, deceased. Passed March 15, 1713–14.[1]

An Act to enable Thomas Lambert, one of the principal Creditors of John Easton, late of Nottingham in the County of Burlington, deceased, and Administrator of the Goods, Rights, and Credits of the Estate or Estates of Inheritance within the County of Burlington and the County of Salem in the Province of Nova Cæsarea, to sell Lands for and towards the Payment of his just Debts. Passed March 17, 1713–14.[2]

An Act to enable certain Trustees to sell and dispose of a small Estate of Inheritance in the County of Burlington. Passed March 17, 1713–14.[3]

An Act for vesting the Lands, late the Estate and Inheritance of William Hall, Esq., late of Salem in the County of Salem, in Trustees, to be sold and disposed of for the Payment of Debts, &c. Passed January 26, 1716–1717.[4]

An Act to enable John Pittinger and Sycha Pittinger to sell and dispose of the Real Estate of Richard Pittinger, deceased, for the Payment of Debts, &c. Passed January 26, 1716–1717.[5]

An Act to enforce the due Administration of the Estate of Capt. John Bown, deceased, late of the County of Monmouth and Province of New-Jersey. Passed March 27, 1719.[6]

An Act for vesting the Lands late the Estate and Inheritance of Robert Burnet, Esq., late of the County of Monmouth in the Province of New-Jersey, in Trustees, to be sold and disposed of for the Payment of Debts. Passed March 28, 1719.[7]

As no more acts of this description were passed until after the Revolution it is possible that relief was had in such cases through the intervention of the Court of Chancery.[8] Governor

J. Archives*, XIV., 427-9, 435-6. It is not unlikely that the Governor had private instructions to discourage the passage of such bills.

William Burnet, who arrived in 1719, is said to have been partial to that Court, and loved to "magnify his office" as Chancellor.

GOVERNOR FRANKLIN'S FINAL ACTS AS ORDINARY.

Amid all the excitement and turmoil of the impending war, Governor Franklin went on with his accustomed duties, and among the probates of wills granted under his signature we find these, down to the last days of his administration:

Amos Benton, of Salem, will dated May 10, 1776; proved June 17, 1776, before John Carey, surrogate; probate granted same day.[1]

John Firth, will dated 30th 4th mo., 1773; proved June 20, 1776, before John Carey, surrogate; probate granted same day.[2]

Josiah Miller, of the township of South Hanover, Morris county, will dated Sept. 26, 1775; proved March 15, 1776, before Abraham Ogden, surrogate; probate granted same day.[3]

Andrew Miller, of Roxbury, Morris county, will dated May 6, 1775; proved March 25, 1776, before Richard Kemble, surrogate; probate granted same day.[4]

Letters of administration were granted, June 20, 1776, to William Nixon, administrator of the estate of Samuel Hartley, late of Salem, deceased.[5]

It is quite evident that these certificates of probate and letters of administration were signed in blank by the Governor and distributed to the surrogates. This would account for the palpable anachronism in the two following entries in the records:

Letters of administration were granted by Governor Franklin unto Samuel Jacques, 3d, administrator of the estate of Henry Martin, late of Middlesex county, deceased, June 27, 1776.[6]

3 Liber M of Wills, 1. 4 Ibid., 434-5. This is the final entry in this volume.
5 Liber No. 16 of Wills, 500.
6 Liber M of Wills, 31. Governor Franklin was placed under arrest on June 17, by order of the Provincial Congress, and on June 25 was ordered to be sent to Connecticut. He was not in a position to transact any official business after his arrest.

Letters of administration with will annexed were granted on the estate of Peter Sonmans, late of Philadelphia, deceased, by Governor Franklin, September 9, 1776.[1]

UNDER THE STATE GOVERNMENT.

The Constitution of New Jersey, adopted July 2, 1776, provided (Sec. VIII): "That the Governor be Ordinary or Surrogate General." And (Sec. IX): "That the Governor and Council (seven whereof shall be a quorum) be the Court of Appeals in the last Resort in all Causes of Law as heretofore."

"This was never construed to give appeals from the Ordinary, and the Legislature never provided for taking such appeals. Until then, either in England or this country, no appeal had ever been given, or been had from the Prerogative or Testamentary Courts, to the Courts of Appeal in cases of law or equity."[2]

The Convention which adopted the Constitution of 1776 adopted this resolution on July 4 of that year:

"Resolved, That, in order to prevent a failure of justice, all judges, justices of the peace, sheriffs, coroners, and other inferior officers of the late government within this Colony, proceed in the execution of their several offices, under the authority of the people, until the intended Legislature and the several officers of the new government be settled and perfected, having respect to the present Constitution of New Jersey, as by the Congress of late ordained, and the orders of the Continental and Provincial Congresses; and that all actions, suits and processes be continued, altering only the style and form thereof, according to the terms by the said Constitution prescribed, in the further prosecution thereof."[3]

The Legislature enacted, October 2, 1776: "That the several Courts of Law and Equity of this state shall be confirmed and established, and continued to be held with like Powers under the present Government, and at the same Times and Places, as they were held at and before the Declaration of Independency lately made by the Honourable the Continental Congress."[1]

This raised the question whether the Prerogative Court came under either of the categories within the scope of Sec. IX of the Constitution of 1776, or the statute just recited. On this point it was finally decided, in 1869:

["The Prerogative] Court has always been possessed of certain branches of jurisdiction which reside in the ecclesiastical tribunals in England. Hence, it has ever been regarded as an ecclesiastical court, and therefore does not properly come under the denomination of a Court of Law or Equity."[2]

The Surrogate General was, by an act passed October 8, 1778, left at liberty to employ or appoint a deputy or deputies.[3]

William Livingston having been elected Governor on August 31, 1776, by the Legislature in joint meeting, accepted, and entered upon the duties of that office on September 7. The hold-over surrogates who still had on hand the old probate blanks erased the name of Franklin and interlined that of Livingston instead. The Register of the Prerogative office began new volumes of records of wills, the first entry in Liber No. 18, page 1, being the record of the will of John Sexton, of the township of Bedminster, Somerset county, dated September 10, 1776, and proved October 14, 1776, before James Kirkpatrick, surrogate; probate granted the same day, by Governor William Livingston.[4]

4 Liber No. 16 contains records of probates of wills by Governor Livingston as of January 23, 1775; June 6, 1776, and September 6, 1776—all before his accession to office. These entries were all made after April 29, 1777, and after he became Ordinary. The careless use of left-over blanks explains the error. Liber No. 17 contains no records between June 17, 1776, and 1785. Liber M, of East Jersey Wills, contains no records from June 27, 1776, until 1780.

The disorganization of the governmental machinery consequent upon the declaration of the independence of New Jersey was keenly felt in the matter of the settlement of estates. Writing from Newark, June 21, 1777, to Governor Livingston, that public-spirited citizen, Joseph Hedden, junior, says: "I am daily applied to by some of the inhabitants of this place to nominate some fit person to act as deputy surrogate. There are a number of wills to be proved, and letters of administration granted, and no person in this county qualified to act in that office. If your Excellency would please to appoint Elisha Boudinot, Esq., to that office it would greatly oblige a number of the inhabitants of this town."[1]

Letters of administration were granted by Governor Livingston, dated November 21, 1777, in which he sets forth: "Know ye that at Newark on the day of the date hereof, the last will and testament of Daniel Tichenor, late of Essex, deceased, was proved before Elisha Boudinot, surrogate, who was thereunto duly authorized and appointed for that purpose, and now approved and allowed of by me." Letters were accordingly issued to Susan Tichenor, the executrix named in the will, who was required to return a true and perfect inventory unto the registry of the Prerogative Court in the Secretory's office at Burlington.[2]

SPECIAL ACTS FOR SETTLING CERTAIN ESTATES.

The uncertainty as to the jurisdiction of the courts during the Revolutionary period was also instanced by a petition from the legatees of Cornelius Johnson, presented to the General Assembly May 17, 1777, asking the House to appoint some persons to sell lands of his estate, there being no provision in the law at the time, providing for such action.

Special acts were passed from time to time, in the absence of power in the Courts to act in such matters, as follows:

An Act to confirm the Last Will and Testament of George

FIRST LEGISLATION CONCERNING THE PREROGATIVE COURT.

The first legislation in New Jersey concerning the powers and duties of the Prerogative Court was a statute passed December 16, 1784, entitled "An Act to Ascertain the Power and Authority of the Ordinary and his Surrogates, to Regulate the Jurisdiction of the Prerogative Court, and to Establish an Orphan's Court in the Several Counties of this State." The preamble declares that "it is necessary that the power and authority of the Ordinary of the State, and his surrogates, should be defined, the jurisdiction of the Prerogative Court regulated, and an Orphan's Court established in the several counties of this state."

This act provided:

"Sec. I. From and after the passing of this act, the authority of the ordinary shall extend only to the granting of probates of wills, letters of administration, letters of guardianship, and marriage licenses, and to the hearing and finally determining of all disputes that may arise thereon.

"Sec. II. For the more regular hearing and determining of all causes, cognizable before the ordinary, he shall statedly hold a prerogative court at the times and places appointed, or that hereafter shall be appointed by him, for holding the court of chancery, when he shall hear, and finally determine all causes, that shall come before him, either directly, or by appeal from any of his surrogates, or the orphan's court, hereinafter established."

"Sec. IV. The Ordinary shall hereafter appoint but one deputy or surrogate in each county of the state; and the power and authority of such surrogate shall be limited to the county for which he shall be appointed."

By Sec. V the Judges of the Court of Common Pleas, in the several counties, or any three of them, were constituted and appointed the Orphan's Court for such county, and the surrogate of the county was made the clerk or register of said court. By Sec. VII the Orphan's Court was given full power and authority to hear and determine all disputes and controversies, whatsoever, respecting the existence of wills, the fairness of inventories, the right of administration, and the allowance of the accounts of executors, administrators, guardians or trustees, audited and stated by the surrogate, with power to award process, etc. In effect, the Orphan's Courts were given the same power as the Prerogative Court, but the latter retained the original jurisdiction it had formerly enjoyed.[1]

This statute may be thus analyzed:

First. It regulated the jurisdiction of the prerogative court, by providing for the holding of stated terms of said court, for hearing and determining all causes that might come before the Ordinary, either directly, or by appeal. (Sec. II.) Where disputes respecting the existence of a will, the fairness of an inventory, or the right of administration, were determined by the orphan's court, an appeal lay to the prerogative court, if demanded by one of the parties, within one month next after the sentence or decree of the Orphan's Court. (Sec. XV.) It thus vested in one officer the powers which in England had been entrusted to the Archbishop (or Prerogative Judge) and the Ordinaries, or Bishops. This same power had always been exercised by the Governors of New Jersey, as we have seen.

Second. It "ascertained the power and authority of the ordinary and his surrogates," in Secs. I, II, and IV, quoted above. In England the jurisdiction of the Ordinary extended to the collating of benefices, and other ecclesiastical functions. These had never been exercised by him in New Jersey, and the statute expressly eliminates them. The original jurisdiction of the Ordinary is clearly preserved.

This subject, particularly the scope of the act of 1784, was thoroughly reviewed in the matter of Abraham Coursen's will, at the April term of the Prerogative Court, 1843. In that case, the Ordinary (William Pennington) after reviewing somewhat briefly the history of the jurisdiction of the Prerogative Court, came to this conclusion:

"The Ordinary has the same original and appellate powers now that he ever had. He has never been deprived of these powers by any act of the legislature in fact; leaving out of view the question whether an act of that kind would be constitutional if passed at all. The acts of 1784 and 1820 are merely declaratory, so far as they attempt to specify the subjects of the Ordinary's jurisdiction, or that of his surrogates. I have, therefore, no doubt at all that the Ordinary's original jurisdiction over the probate of wills, and the granting of letters of administration, is general and full, and not limited and special."[1]

[1] 4 N. J. Eq. (3 Gr. Ch.), 415. This ruling has been followed ever since. See Lothrop's case, Prerogative Court, October term, 1880, 33 N. J. Eq. (6 Stew.), 247; Fisher's case, Prerogative Court, May term, 1892, 49 N. J. Eq. (4 Dick.), 519; Simmons case, Prerogative Court, October term, 1896, not reported; Bracher's case, Prerogative Court, May term, 1900, 60 N. J. Eq. (15 Dick.), 351 J

Third. It established an orphan's court in the several counties of the State. As already shown, Secs. VII and VIII of this act, in defining the powers and duties of this court, merely extended to the new tribunal the functions formerly exercised exclusively by the Ordinary. Other sections regulated the procedure relative to disputes concerning wills, the auditing of accounts of executors and administrators, fees, etc. "This court was instituted by law to remedy and supply the defects in the powers of the prerogative court, with regard to the accountability of executors, administrators and guardians." Sec. XIX provided that all final sentences or decrees of the orphan's courts, where no appeal was given to the prerogative court, should be subject to removal, by certiorari, into the supreme court, if applied for within three months.[1]

The novel feature of this act was the provision therein made for the protection and control of the estates of minors. Sec. IX authorized the court to exact bonds from any executor, executrix, guardian and trustee, having the care and trust of minors'

"In all the other cases in which a special jurisdiction is given to the Orphan's Court under the act of June 13, 1820, such as decreeing further security to be given by administrators or guardians, or revoking their letters, and on complaints under the 8th, 9th and 10th sections, and upon the 12th, 13th, 19th and 20th relative to the division and sale of lands; and upon the 30th respecting the final allowance of accounts, in all these instances, being in nowise the subject of the Ordinary's jurisdiction, as defined by the statute, nor any appeal given to him, the remedy after final sentence or decree of the Orphan's Court, is by certiorari out of the Supreme Court." 4 Griffith's Law Register, 1198.

This provision as to certiorari remained the law until the adoption of the Constitution of 1844, which provides (Art. VI, Sec. IV, Par. 3): "All persons aggrieved by any order, sentence or decree of the orphans' court, may appeal from the same, or from any part thereof, to the prerogative court; but such order, sentence or decree shall not be removed into the supreme court, or circuit court, if the subject matter thereof be within the jurisdiction of the orphans' court."

estates, in certain cases. Secs. XI and XII authorized the sale of lands to pay debts in certain cases, and for the support and education of minors. Sec. XIII authorized the investment of minors' money under the direction of the court. Sec. XIV provided for the partition of minors' estates. Sec. XVIII provided for the appointment of guardians of orphan minors, or of minors having no father.

"The name and idea of the Orphans' Court were borrowed, not from the English ecclesiastical courts, but from a court called the Court of Orphans, for a long time established in London and some of the other large cities of England, and which, as its name imports, had jurisdiction over the estates and persons of orphans only."[1]

This corresponds in many respects with the provisions in the Roman-Dutch law for Orphan Masters, and the powers exercised by the Burgomasters and Schepens of New Netherland, who sat as an Orphan's Court, as described on pages xv–xix, ante.

By an act passed March 2, 1785, the Ordinary or Judge of the Prerogative Court was authorized to order the imprisonment of any person neglecting or refusing to obey any citations, or perform any sentence or decree made by him, until the contumacious person should obey the citation, or perform the sentence or decree.[2]

[1] Graham v. Houghtalin, Court of Errors, June term, 1863, 30 N. J. L. (1 Vr.), 562. This was a case where a father, as guardian by nature of his minor children, obtained a decree of the Essex county orphan's court to sell the lands of said minors for their support, their father and mother having the life estate, and they the remainder. The Court of Errors set aside the sale on the ground that the children being minors, and not orphans, the orphan's court had no jurisdiction; that the father, being guardian by nature only, was not such a guardian as named in the statute. See also Genealogy of the Doremus Family in America, by William Nelson, Paterson, N. J., 1897, p. 77, for additional particulars of the case, which, however, are very fully detailed in the opinion cited.

There is a "species of guardianship that is founded on the custom of particular cities and boroughs, of which the custom of London is the most remarkable. This, we are told, entitles the mayor and aldermen, in their Court of Orphans, to the custody of the person, lands and chattels of every infant whose parent was free of the city of London (at least if he also died within the city): and such custody lasts, in the case of males, till twenty-one; of females, till eighteen or marriage. It is said, however, to be fallen into disuse."—2 Stephen's Com. on Laws of Eng., 327. See also Pulling's Customs of London, 196; Co. Litt. 88 b.

A Supplement to the Orphan's Court Act of 1784, passed March 22, 1786, provided for the partition of lands devised to two or more devisees, by three indifferent persons to be appointed by the Orphan's Court of the county where the lands so devised were situated.[1]

The first general act in relation to the execution of wills was passed November 16, 1795, being entitled "An Act concerning wills." This measure was re-enacted in the revision of 1846, with very slight modifications, and stands substantially unchanged today.[2]

"An Act to regulate the Secretary's Office and the Prerogative Office in this state, and for the faithful execution of the same," passed November 23, 1795, recites that there had been much negligence in recording wills in the office of the Secretary of State, whence had arisen great confusion. The act therefore provided that the Secretary and Register should give bond for the faithful performance and execution of his duties, and subscribe an oath for the proper discharge of such duties. It also required the Secretary and Register to record with all convenient speed, legibly and fairly, all papers coming to his hands, and which might appertain to his office to record; also, to report quarterly to the Governor, and annually to the Legislature.[3]

"An act relative to guardians," passed February 1, 1799, prescribed the duties of guardians, regulated their accounting to the orphan's court, and authorized the guardian to sell the lands of the ward, adequate for his or her maintenance and education, under the direction of the court.[4] This took the place of Sec. XII of the Act of 1784.

[1] Paterson's Laws, 77. Judge Grifith, in "Eumenes," calls attention to the extraordinary character of this legislation, which vested in three persons appointed by the court, the power which by the common law of England had always resided in a jury, and notwithstanding the fact that Section XXII of the Constitution of 1776 expressly provided "that the unestimable right of trial by jury shall remain confirmed, as a part of the law of this Colony, without repeal, forever," and Section XXIII required every member of the Legislature to take an oath that he would not assent to any law which should annul or repeal that part of the twenty-second section of the Constitution respecting the trial by jury.

Executors or administrators were authorized to sell lands of their testators or intestates, to pay debts of such testators or intestates, under the authority of the orphan's court, by Sections XIX–XXIV of "An Act making lands liable to be sold for the payment of debts," passed February 18, 1799, which repealed Secs. XI and XII of the Orphan's Court Act of 1784.[1] Another act, passed November 13, 1804, empowered the orphan's court to decree the fulfillment of contracts for the sale of lands, made in the lifetime of any testator or intestate, and to order the execution of a deed therefor by the executor, administrator or legal representatives of the deceased.[2] The provision for the sale of lands of testators or intestates for the paymant of debts was extended by an act passed February 21, 1820, to the part or parts of a share of propriety of undivided rights, or warrant to locate any land, either in the eastern or western division of New Jersey, under the direction of the Orphans' Court.[3] "An act concerning the estates of persons who die insolvent," passed June 12, 1820, embodied a revision and codification of previous statutes authorizing executors and administrators to sell lands of their decedents only by direction of the Orphans' Court.[4]

"An Act concerning surrogates, and declaring what exemplifications of wills and testaments shall be holden and received as good evidence," passed June 7, 1799, required the surrogates to make quarterly reports in writing to the register of the prerogative court, and to give bond to the State for the faithful performance of their office, etc.[5]

An act was passed June 13, 1797, "for the distribution of the estates of persons, who die, not leaving sufficient property to pay all their just debts," which provided that such estates should be distributed among the creditors pro rata, after payment of the physician's bill, during the last sickness, funeral charges, and judgments obtained and entered of record during the life of the decedent.[1] This act was revised June 12, 1820.[2]

CHANGE IN THE SYSTEM OF RECORDING WILLS.

Until 1804 it was the practice, no matter where or before whom wills were proved, to send them to the Register of the Prerogative Court to be recorded—at Perth Amboy, Burlington or Trenton, as the case might be.

By an act passed November 9, 1803, a new system was instituted. It was provided in this statute that the surrogate general should, at the expense of the State, provide the several surrogates with seals, with one uniform device. Up to this time it had been the rule to record all wills in the office of the Register of the Prerogative Court, but this act provided that wills, letters of guardianship and all letters testamentary and administrations granted and issued by the surrogate, and also all inventories by him received, should be by him recorded in his office, which records should have the same force, validity, and effect, as the like records in the registry of the prerogative office. The original wills were to be transmitted quarterly to the register of the prerogative court, to be filed in his office. This continues to be the usual practice, but the original jurisdiction of the Ordinary has remained. By this act the surrogates were also vested with the powers of the Ordinary in the appointment of guardians of persons under twenty-one years, subject to an appeal to the prerogative court.[3] Where suitable offices were provided for their accommodation, surrogates were required to keep their books and records therein, by an act passed December 1, 1804.[4] It was made the duty of the register of the prerogative court, by an act passed November 25, 1808, to keep an alphabetical index of testators, and to put up the wills of each year and county by themselves; also to keep an index of intestates, inventories of whose estates he might receive, and to file such inventories.[5] This act was embodied in a revision passed May 27, 1820.[6]

6 Rev. 728.

The orphan's court was given power, by an act passed March 1, 1804, to appoint guardians of idiots or lunatics, and to direct the sale of their lands for the payment of their debts, and the support of their households, if they had any.[1] This act was revised and amended, Feb. 28, 1820.[2]

Some later legislation may be briefly noted here:

Where commissioners appointed to divide lands between coparceners, joint-tenants, tenants in common, guardians of minors or trustees, should be of the opinion that the lands were so circumstanced that a partition thereof could not be made without great prejudice to the owners of the same, the court appointing them might order the commissioners or persons appointed to make partition, to sell the lands and pay the proceeds to the parties interested; the guardians of persons under the age of twenty-one years, entitled to a proportion of the moneys arising from any such sale, to be required to give bond to the Governor.[3]

Where a debtor had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, the assignee was required by an act passed February 23, 1820, to exhibit to the surrogate of the county an inventory and valuation of the estate so assigned, and enter into bond to the state for the faithful performance of the trust; the surrogate was directed to endorse the receipt of said bond on the deed of assignment, after which the same was to be recorded in the County Clerk's office.[4]

"A Supplement to the act relative to dower," passed February 24, 1820, gave the Orphans' Court jurisdiction in the appointment of commissioners to set off dower, with an appeal to the surrogate-general. Where a husband died seized of lands in two or more counties, the commissioners were to be appointed by the Ordinary or Surrogate-General.[5]

REVISION OF THE ACT OF 1784.

The act passed December 16, 1784, entitled "An Act to Ascertain the Power and Authority of the Ordinary and his Surrogates, to Regulate the Jurisdiction of the Prerogative Court, and to Establish an Orphan's Court in the several counties of the State," and all the other acts relating to the same subject, were revised and codified in a new statute with the same title, passed June 13, 1820.[1]

In this revision the plural form was followed in designating "The Orphans' Court," instead of the singular number, as in the original act. Section 1 omits the provision extending the jurisdiction of the Ordinary to marriage licenses. Section 4 provides that the Ordinary shall appoint but one deputy or surrogate in each county, whose power and authority shall be limited to such county. Section 6 of the old act, requiring the judges of the Orphans' Court to take an oath of office, is omitted. Section 7 of the new act authorizes the court to require security of guardians, and also to demand new security where the court deems that previously given to be insufficient. It omits the provision authorizing the Ordinary to grant letters of administration. Section 8 extends to guardians as well as administrators the provision in Section 7 relative to security.[2] Section 9 provides that upon the application of the surety of an administrator or guardian the court may order an investigation of his accounts, and may require security for the true payment of the balance remaining in his hands, otherwise the court may revoke the letters of administration or guardianship, and grant the same to other persons. Section 11 of the new act regulates the investment of moneys by executors, administrators, trustees or guardians, such investment to be made under the direction of the court, otherwise the executor, etc., shall be accountable for the interest that might have been made thereby; where they make use of the money of minors, the guardians shall be accountable for interest and principal. Sections 13–19 incorporate the provisions of the former act[3] relative to the partition of lands of coparceners, etc. Section 20 provides for sales of lands to satisfy judgments by authority of the Orphans' Court, as under the act of February 18, 1799. Section 21 provides that the Surrogate of each county shall take depositions to wills, administrations, inventories, and administration bonds in cases of intestacy, and issue thereon letters testamentary and of administration; cases of dispute to be heard by the Orphans' Court, subject to an appeal to the Prerogative Court. Section 26 authorizes the Ordinary or Surrogate General to cause any guardianship bond to be prosecuted in a court of record, etc. Section 27 provides "that the powers and duties formerly exercised and performed by the Ordinary, relative to the admission of guardians, for persons under the age of twenty-one years, shall hereafter be exercised and performed by the Orphans' Court of the county in which the minor applying for a guardian may reside, or shall have real or personal estate, subject, however, to an appeal to the Prerogative Court. . . . . Provided, that nothing in this act shall be construed to prevent the Ordinary or Surrogate-General, in person, from granting probates of wills, letters of administration and letters of guardianship, from the prerogative office, in cases where a convenience will arise from doing the same." Section 28 provides for the appointment of guardians of orphans of the age of fourteen years or upwards, on petition to the Orphans' Court, signed by such orphans in the presence of the surrogate; and for the appointment of guardians of orphans under fourteen years of age, upon the petition of a mother, or next of kin, etc. Section 29 requires the surrogate to enter into bond. Section 30 provides that the surrogate shall audit and state the accounts of executors and administrators, guardians and trustees, and report the same to the Orphans' Court. Section 31 provides that any executor, administrator, guardian or trustee, accounting, may be examined by the court under oath; the same section provides for the allowance of commissions. Section 32 provides that the sentence or decree of the Orphans' Court on the final settlement and allowance of such accounts shall be conclusive upon all parties, except in cases of fraud or mistake. Section 38 provides that executors, etc., shall produce receipts and discharges for the payment of legacies, etc., duly acknowledged, which shall be recorded by the surrogate in a book provided for the same. The other provisions of the act were almost precisely the same as in the original acts.[1]

It will be noticed that this act discloses a distinct purpose to transfer from the Ordinary or Surrogate-General to the surrogates, and from the Prerogative Court to the Orphans' Courts, much of the jurisdiction formerly vested exclusively in the former. This is particularly apparent in Section 27, although the jurisdiction of the Ordinary is expressly reserved by the proviso added to the section. Section 23, which authorizes the surrogates to issue letters testamentary and letters of administration, provides: "and the said probate of wills and letters of administration shall have the same validity and effect as probate of wills and letters of administration issued by the register of the Prerogative office, in the name of the Ordinary or Surrogate-General, with the seal of the office affixed."

The scope of this Revision of 1820 was carefully reviewed in the matter of Abraham Coursen's will, by the Ordinary, in 1843,[2] with the conclusion that "the Ordinary has the same original and appellate powers now that he ever had. He has never been deprived of these powers by any act of the Legislature in fact; leaving out of view, the question whether an act of that kind would be constitutional."[3] It was the view of the writer in Griffith's Law Register that the Ordinary had original jurisdiction in regard to the granting of probate of wills, etc.[4]

THE APPOINTMENT OF SURROGATES.

A remarkable encroachment on the prerogatives of the Ordinary in the matter of the appointment of surrogates was made by the Legislature in 1822, when that body assumed the power which previously had been always exercised by that functionary. An act passed November 28, 1822, provided:

"The surrogates of the several counties shall be appointed by the joint meeting,[1] and hold office for five years, unless sooner removed according to law. Vacancies shall be filled by the Governor until the next session of the legislature, when his successor shall be appointed by the joint meeting for five years." [2] A measure of this kind, passed at the present day, would be interpreted by the average citizen as simply a "grab" for the "spoils of office." There is no reason to believe that the Legislators of 1822 were above the human weaknesses of their successors. It is possible that the act was intended as a step in the direction of popular government, in vesting the appointment in the representatives elected by the people, instead of in the Ordinary, who was himself appointed by the Legislature in joint meeting. A more pronounced step in that direction was taken in the constitution of 1844, which provides that the surrogates of the several counties shall be elected by the legal voters of the counties respectively and shall hold office for five years. They are subject to removal only by impeachment.

An act passed December 12, 1825, authorized "the Surrogate-General, upon the written application of a majority of the judges of the Orphans' Court of the county, supported by affidavits, to remove any surrogate incapacitated by mental derangement, insanity or great debility of mind, from properly performing the duties of his office, and to appoint some fit person to perform such duties during such incapacity, or until the next meeting of the Legislature."[3]

FOREIGN WILLS.

Foreign wills—those made beyond and disposing of property within, the Colony—had been recognized at least as early as 1686, as in the case of Edward Barker, already cited.[4] It is true that in a sense this was not a foreign will, being within the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of Canterbury. But on September 9, 1776, in the new State of New Jersey, a certified copy of the will (dated October —, 1772) of Peter Sonmans, as recorded in Philadelphia, was produced, and letters of administration with the will annexed were granted thereon, under the Prerogative seal.[1] By an act passed December 9, 1825, foreign wills were authorized to be filed or recorded in the prerogative office of this State, or in the office of the surrogate of any county, such wills to be of the same force and effect as if the probate thereon had been granted by the Ordinary or Surrogate of the county.[2] The scope of this act was two-fold: it preserved the record in New Jersey of the disposition of property within the State by the wills of non-residents; and it also placed the office of Surrogate in this matter upon a parity with that of the Ordinary.

MISCELLANEOUS ACTS.

Another act passed December 9, 1825, provided that citation or process of attachment issued out of the orphans' court might be served or executed by the sheriff of the county upon any person or persons residing without the county, but within the state.[3]

By an act of February 19, 1830, the Ordinary was authorized, where he had been interested in a case, to call to his assistance one of the justices of the Supreme Court to sit and advise with him on the hearing or argument of such case.[4]

Any oath, affidavit or affirmation required to be made or taken to use before any surrogate or any orphan's court, was authorized to be made and taken before the surrogate, by an act passed February 21, 1840.[5]

A seemingly unnecessary bit of legislation was an act passed February 25, 1842, authorizing the orphan's court and the county courts to adjourn from any day in the term to any subsequent day in the next term, but for not more than one week.[6] Probably the point had been raised that the court could not adjourn to a day beyond the term.

An important change in the practice was made by an act passed February 22, 1843, which provided that where a decree of the orphans' court on the final settlement or allowance of the accounts of executors, etc., or any final decree of such orphans' court should be reversed and vacated or set aside by the Supreme Court on certiorari, the latter court (instead of sending the matter back for the action of the lower tribunal) might direct their clerk to audit and re-state the accounts, and might grant a decree thereon in the same manner as the orphans' court might have done. The act also provided that if any minor or minors should become seized or possessed of, or entitled to any real or personal estate in the lifetime of the father of such minor or minors, the Ordinary or Surrogate-General, or the orphans' court, might appoint the father or other suitable person or persons, guardian or guardians of the estate of such minor or minors.[1]

PROPOSED REVISION OF THE ORPHANS' COURT ACT.

The inadequacy of the Revision of 1820 was speedily recognized by the Bench and Bar, and in response to a very general demand for an improvement in the procedure in the Prerogative and Orphans' Courts the Legislature adopted a joint resolution, February 6, 1833, authorizing the Governor to appoint "some fit and discreet person, learned in the law, to amend, revise and adjust all acts, parts of acts and supplements relating to the Ordinary and his surrogates, and the Orphans' Court, and the practice and proceedings in all matters severally cognizable before them, or which of right ought so to be, and report at the next sitting of the Legislature."[2] Under this resolution the Governor, in April, 1833, selected Joseph W. Scott, of Somerset County, one of the ablest lawyers of the day, to prepare the report and revision in question. Col. Scott made his report February 8, 1834, and it was printed in a pamphlet of one hundred pages or more. It comprised an able and exceedingly interesting review and history of the Prerogative Court and the Orphans' Court, and of their procedure and practice, from early times. It also embraced a proposed revision and codification of the several statutes relating to those courts, and the subjects within their jurisdiction, and incorporated some radical amendments to the existing laws.[3] The changes suggested seem to have been too numerous and too pronounced to meet with the favor of the Legislature. Accordingly, the whole subject was allowed to remain in abeyance until the adoption of the new constitution of the State, in 1844.

THE CONSTITUTION OF 1844.

By that instrument (Art. VI, Sec. I.) the Prerogative Court was made one of the constitutional courts: "The judicial power shall be vested in a court of errors and appeals in the last resort in all causes as heretofore;[1] a court for the trial of impeachments; a court of chancery; a prerogative court; a supreme court; circuit court," etc.

Whereas formerly the Governor, appointed annually by the Legislature in joint meeting, was also Chancellor, Ordinary and Judge of the Prerogative Court, which practically made only lawyers eligible to the office of Governor, the new constitution provided that the Chancellor should be nominated and by and with the advice and consent of the Senate appointed by the Governor, for the term of seven years; and that the Chancellor, so appointed, should be the Ordinary, and Judge of the Prerogative Court.

THE REVISIONS OF 1846, 1874 AND 1898.

The numerous changes made by the constitution of 1844 made imperative a general revision of the statutes. This was entrusted to a commission, of whom Henry W. Green, subsequently Chief Justice, and later Chancellor, and ex-Governor Peter D. Vroom are understood to have been the most active members. Their revision and codification of the statutes was enacted into law by the Legislature, by a series of acts approved April 16, 1846, and known as the Revised Statutes, and of course embraced a revision and amendment of the laws relating to the Prerogative Court and the Orphans' Court.[2]

---

[1] In 1846 an appeal was taken from a decree of the Ordinary to the Court of Errors and Appeals, but the latter Court held that it had never possessed or exercised such jurisdiction, and had acquired no new powers by the Constitution of 1844. The subject received a new aspect when the Legislature passed an act, approved February 17, 1869, expressly authorizing an appeal to be taken from the Prerogative Court, and this was held to be constitutional, as not being an infringement upon or a reduction of the powers or jurisdiction of the latter court, but merely an elargement of the powers of the Court of Appeals.—Pamph. Laws, 1869, p. 84. See Anthony v. Anthony, Court of Errors and Appeals, 1846, 5 N. J. Eq., 627; Harris v. Vanderveer's Exrs., same Court, 1869, 21 N. J. Eq., cited on p. xlvi, ante, note.

[2] Revised Statutes, Trenton, 1847, pp. 203, 212; Revision of 1877, p. 220.

The session laws since 1846 are within the reach of everyone desiring to consult them. Hence it is unnecessary to continue this historical review further. It may be noted, however, that the statutes on these subjects were again revised, though very slightly, in 1874, when the title of the Orphans' Court Act of 1874 was altered, to read: "An Act respecting the Orphans' Court, relating to the powers of the Ordinary, the Orphans' Court and the Surrogates," approved March 27, 1874. [1]

A very careful, comprehensive and most admirably drafted revision of the Orphans' Court Act was enacted in 1898, entitled "An Act respecting the Orphans' Court" (Revision of 1898).[2]

THE PREROGATIVE SEAL.

There is reason to believe that there were a seal of the Colony, and seals of the Colonial Courts, in use in the administration of Gov. Philip Carteret, but they are not known to exist, and no impression of the court seals of his time has come down to us. The Proprietors of East Jersey were distinctly religious, and expressed their reverence for the Almighty on every suitable occasion. Their seal, adopted in 1682, bears the legends, "Righteousness exalteth a Nation," and "'Tis God giveth the increase." The earliest impression of the Prerogative seal that has been found is affixed to a certified copy of the will or codicil of Thomas French, "being with the said original Examined this Third of May Anno Dom 1699 As witness hereunto my hand & seale of office." The document is signed by Tho. Revell, Secretary and Register, and bears a very fine, clear impression of the Prerogative seal in red wax.[3] Another fair impression of the seal is found affixed to letters of administration granted July 21, 1700, to William Malcolm, of Philadelphia, principal creditor, on the estate of John Haughton, late of Mannington, Salem county, West Jersey, "by the justices of West Jersey, sitting as the Court at Gloucester, and given under the hand and seal of the Register's office at Burlington."[4]

A reproduction of the seal attached to the former document (1699) is given herewith. The design is not heraldic, nor is any attempt at blazonry apparent. It is evidently a conventional representation of the globe, with its embracing great circles and bands. The legend unmistakably reads: THE EARTH IS THE LORDS AND THE FVLNESE THEREOF. The sentence is undoubtedly from the first line of Psalm xxiv: "The earth is the Lord's and the fulness thereof." This is the reading of all the English versions in use in Scotland and England at the date of this seal—not only the authorized version of King James, 1611, but the Genevan or Breeches bible, 1560, and the Cranmer bible of 1539. This seal is an inch and one-sixteenth in diameter. There are no punctuation marks between the words.

When Lord Cornbury became Governor of New Jersey and appointed Thomas Revell Register of the Prerogative Court, February 28, 1703–4, it is probable that the latter procured a new seal. A fair impression of the Prerogative seal used under the Royal Governors is found affixed to letters of administration granted January 10, 1765, to Anna Wetherell, on the estate of Thomas Wetherell, late of Salem county, deceased. This seal is an inch and an eighth in diameter. The design is the same as that of the impression of 1699, but there is a punctuation mark after each word, and a fleur de lis at the end. The inscription is enclosed between raised lines, and reads: THE · EARTH · IS · THE · LORDS · AND · THE · FVLNESE · THEREOF.

After Governor William Franklin was deported from New Jersey, in June, 1776, by order of the Continental Congress, the official seals of the Province were missing. For a time Governor William Livingston, the Executive of the new State, affixed his private seal-at-arms to public documents, in the absence of a great seal of the State, and indeed this was expressly authorized by the Legislature until such time as a new seal could be procured. He stretched his authority so far as to attach his private seal to letters of administration granted on the estate of David Tichenor, in 1778.[1] Similar letters granted to the executors of Samuel Sherry, late of the county of Salem, in 1779, have no seal affixed. On January 31, 1783, letters of administration were granted to Sarah Miller, on the estate of Peter Miller, by William Livingston, Governor, and for the lack of any other convenient seal, they are issued under that of the Supreme Court. Shortly after this, however, all such instruments have attached the proper seal of the Prerogative Court. This was very similar to the old seal, but was a trifle larger. A brilliant impression of the new seal is found attached to the certificate of probate of the will of Christeen Kitts, late of Salem county, under date of March 7, 1801. This seal is an inch and three-eighths in diameter, or a quarter of an inch larger than its immediate predecessor, and five-sixteenths of an inch larger than the Colonial seal of 1699 and earlier. The design is the same as both the former seals, except that the broad dexter curved band crosses the circle of the equator more to the west of the meridian than in either of the others, and does not fully touch the periphery of the globe. The words of the legend are separated by punctuation marks as in the case of the impression of 1765, but the fleur de lis at the end has shrunk to a merely conventional figure. The greatest change, however, is in the substitution of the word EVENESE for FVLNESE, so that the legend is: THE · EARTH · IS · THE · LORDS · AND · THE · EVENESE · THEREOF. The engraver has copied from a faint impression in which the first syllable of the word in question, FVL, appeared to be EVE. This readily accounts for the mistake in the legend, for that it is an error is beyond question. This is the seal which has been in use in the Prerogative office for more than a hundred years, until now it is barely legible. No authority has been found for the use of this seal, nor has it been discovered when it was engraved. It seems to have been conceded that one of the inherent powers of a court was to adopt a seal, and that has been done by the Prerogative Court, as well as by the other tribunals of New Jersey, from the earliest times, and without express legislative sanction.

PREROGATIVE SEAL, 1801.
Size—One inch and three-eighths in diameter.

Calendar of New Jersey Wills.

Note.—The books cited as Libers 1, 2, 3, etc., are of West Jersey Wills. Those cited as Libers A, B, etc., are of East Jersey Wills. Where there is no reference, the wills or other papers, of which abstracts are given, are among the unrecorded wills of the county to which they pertain. Thus, on this page, the will of George Abott (or Abbott) is recorded in Liber No. 3 of West Jersey Wills, page 61. The inventory of his personal estate is not recorded, but is filed in the box or boxes containing Salem county wills and other papers pertaining to the administration of estates for that county. Besides the regular series of West Jersey Wills, there are three of Salem Wills, and many are to be found in the Burlington Records. In some cases where the county is not designated in the papers, the reference has been added, as "Middlesex Wills," meaning that the papers are not recorded, but may be found in the box or boxes containing Middlesex Wills, etc.

[1] The Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts granted leave to the Rev. John Holbrooke, missionary at Salem, N. J., to remove to Burlington, at his request, as appears by the Society's letter to him of March 15, 1725-6. At the same time they sent the Rev. Nathaniel Horwood to take the Salem charge. But when he arrived at Salem, in January, 1727, he found that Mr. Holbrooke had concluded to remain there. Mr. Horwood therefore decided to go to Burlington, which he did. He seems to have met with some success at first, but toward the end of his allotted term of three years, there was a desire expressed (Dec. 3, 1729) by the churchwardens for a change, they alleging that he had "reduced once a brave flourishing congregation, into almost nothing at all." Mr. Horwood himself wrote home to the Society, requesting to be relieved. His wish was gratified, perhaps not altogether unexpectedly, for death took him, January 28, 1730, at Burlington.—Hills's Church at Burlington, passim.

[1] Longfield or Langevelt. [2] Longfield.

[3] The Rev. Alexander Innes was commissioned Chaplain of the Church of England in the Fort in New York, April 20, 1686. He brought over an order from Lord Middleton to Gov. Thomas Dongan that he should have the occupancy of two houses, but they were in such poor condition that he would not live in them. He is referred to as "Doctor" in a paper of Feb. 9-19, 1688, wherein it is stated that he insisted upon a certain interpretation of the words "Wild Indians," used in a treaty with the French. In the troubles in 1689, pending the Revolution, Dr. Innes was declared to be "by outward pretence a Protestant but in effect a meere papist, whoe deceitfully has provided him with a certificate of the Ministers of the Dutch and France Church as if he was a true Protestant." He left New York about August, 1689, probably to escape the persecutions of Jacob Leisler, who in a letter to King William and Queen Mary, dated August 20, 1689, insisted that he had "testimony in good forme" that Dr. Innes was "known to be of opinion contray to" the Protestant religion. Innes and others sent to England a formal submission to the new Sovereigns, and followed it in person. It does not appear when he returned to America; but in October, 1702, George Keith enters in his journal that "Mr. Innes being in Priests orders often preached among them [the people of Shrewsbury, Freehold, and vicinity] and by preaching and conferences frequently with the Quakers and other sorts of people, as also by his pious conversation, has done much good among them and been very instrumental to draw them off from their errors and bring them over to the church." The story of Mr. Innes' ministrations at Shrewsbury and thereabouts is thus summarized by the authorities of the church: "Col. Morris did undoubtedly in the year 1703, very earnestly solicit Dr. Beveridge (late Bishop of St. Asaph) a member of this Society [for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts], to recommend it to the Society, to send a Missionary to Monmouth county, New Jersey, where a considerable body of people had formed themselves into a gathered Church and had promised all the help their narrow circumstances could afford their Minister. The Society were not then able to support a Missionary there. But the Reverend Mr. Alexander Innis happening to be in those parts, took the care of that people upon him. After a worthy discharge of his Function for some time, he died; upon which the Justices of the Peace, the High Sheriff, and the Grand Jury of Monmouth county, did represent to the Society, in the year 1717, that the worthy Reverend Alexander Innis, by unwearied pains and industry, gathered three congregations in this county, tho' much scattered in their habitations; yet did he visit them, teaching them, instructing them all, once at least in three weeks."—*N. ---

[1] Thurlas Sulavan, of New Castle county, Pa., planter, bought, July 25, 1696, a dwelling house and plantation of 178 acres near Northampton river, Burlington county.—N. J. Archives, XXI., 487. He appears to have been interested in some of the doubtful ventures of Capt. William Kidd, from which he received his share of the proceeds, June 11, 1697.—Ibid., 519. On June 24, 1697, he conveyed to Thomas Kendall the tract he had acquired July 25, 1696, and a tract of 150 acres.—Ibid., 520. This conveyance was perhaps in the nature of a mortgage, or else was a trust deed, for on December 29, 1701, Kendall conveyed the property to Mrs. Sullivan.—Ibid., 533. Four days after her husband's will was proved she, by deed dated Feb. 25, 1701–2, conveyed the property in trust for her children.—Ibid., 533. This was evidently in view of her intended marriage to Thomas Wakefield, tailor. Notwithstanding this conveyance, Thomas Wakefield and wife Katherine, Aug. 1, 1702, give a deed for the 150-acre tract.—Ibid., 539. For the meaning of the name Turlough, see ibid., 519, note.

[1] Lars Tollstadius, a Swedish clergyman of Stockholm, volunteered to come to America at his own expense, to succeed the Rev. Andreas Rudman, who was about to return home, after ministering a number of years to the Swedish settlements on the Delaware. His offer was gladly accepted at first, but evil reports began to be circulated about him, and he was forbidden to depart. Nevertheless, he came over, arriving in Philadelphia in November, 1701. He represented that his credentials would soon follow, and on these assurances he was authorized to minister temporarily to the churches as opportunity offered. Shortly before Easter, 1702, the duly commissioned missionary arrived. Tollstadius then, on one pretence or another, crossed over into New Jersey, where he seems to have had address sufficient to win the people to his support, instead of sustaining the Rev. Eric Biorck, the regular minister in charge. Moreover, he secured the erection (in 1704) of a church at Raccoon Creek, while Biorck vainly sought to compel the people to meet their engagements for his own support. Early in the year 1706 a scandalous report arose, concerning the relations of Tollstadius with a young woman of his congregation. It was said that he was bound over to appear at court. On the ninth of May of that year the canoe in which he was carried across the Delaware was driven ashore on the Jersey side. It contained his traveling cloak and an iron plowshare, probably used for an anchor. His lifeless body was found nine days later on the Pennsylvania side of the river, below Upland (now Chester).—Records of Holy Trinity Church (Wilmington), 1890, pp. 88–111; Acrelius's Hist. of New Sweden, 212, 316–318.

[1] "On September 1, 1725, the Rev. Peter Tranberg set sail from Sweden to America for the purpose of relieving the Rev. Mr. Lidenius, who was pastor of the Swedish Churches at Raccoon and Pennsneck, Salem County, N. J. He was accompanied by the Rev. Mr. Andrew Windrufva as Adjunct Pastor, who was called by Bishop Svedberg, in his Ministerial Commission and passport, Drufva, to distinguish him from his unfortunate brother; but he always retained his customary name." The vessel on which the two ministers sailed was wrecked upon the coast of Norway, so that they barely escaped with their lives. Thence they got a vessel to Amsterdam, where they were provided for by the Lutheran clergymen. They went thence to England, and Bishop Svedberg having forwarded to them one thousand dollars in silver coinage for each one of them, from the King of Sweden, they made their journey to New Jersey, where Mr. Tranberg was installed June 30, 1726. ERRATA.

In the will of Isaac Horner, on p. 238, the names have been omitted of his three sons—Isaac, Jacob and Bartholomew.

In the note on p. 92, for Harme Bras, suggested as the probable witness to the will of John Christeson, it is more probable that the witness in question was Barne Cosens.
